1. ——— Definition of—Plunder.—The definition of dacoity in the Penal Code is so wide as to extend to what would have been treated as cases of plunder under the old law. QUEEN v. KHOYRAT ALLY BEG . . . 3 W. R., Cr., 60

2. ——— Elements of offence.—In a case of dacoity, the Judge should direct the jury to convict only if they find that all the prisoners had the intention of causing wrongful loss to the prosecutor or wrongful gain to themselves. QUEEN v. BOMKALLY GHOSH

[W. R., 1894, Cr., 8]

3. ——— House-breaking by night.—Five men armed were discovered committing an act of house-breaking by night. One of the party was engaged in cutting a hole through the wall, while the others stood on guard. When the alarm was given the neighbours ran up, and one of the robbers cut down one of the villagers. Held that the crime of which they were guilty was house-breaking by night, and not dacoity. QUEEN v. BEWAT RAJWAR

[W. R., 1894, Cr., 39]

4. ——— Participators in dacoity—Persons found in possession of property.—When

persons are found within six hours of the commission of a dacoity with portions of the plundered property in their possession, the presumption of law is that they are participators in the dacoity, and not merely receivers. QUEEN v. CASSY MUL

[3 W. R., Cr., 10]

QUEEN v. MOTRI JOLANA . 5 W. R., Cr., 69

5. ——— Taking away produce in good faith under colour of right.—Where the offence that was alleged to have been committed consisted of acts done under a claim of right in good faith entertained by the accused, however erroneously, a criminal charge cannot be sustained. Where, pending a dispute between the accused and another person concerning the melwaram of a village, she removed, or caused her servants to remove, the produce, a charge of dacoity could not be sustained. EXPARTE KARAKAR NAOSHIN . . . 3 Mad., 254

6. ——— Robbery with violence—Penal Code, s. 395—Causing fear of hurt.—When a body of men attack and plunder a house, the mere fact of the proprietor's family having been able to make their escape a few minutes before the robbers forced an entrance does not take that offence out of the purview of s. 395 of the Penal Code. It is sufficient, for the application of the section, that the robbers cause or attempt to cause the fear of instant hurt or of instant wrongful restraint. QUEEN v. KISSORRI PATER . . . 7 W. R., Cr., 35

7. ——— Assembly for purpose of committing dacoity—Admission.—Case of an unlawful assembly the members of which were held guilty of an offence under s. 403 of the Penal Code, on their own admission that they not only knew that the assembly was an assembly for the purpose of committing dacoity, but also that all the persons (including themselves) constituting the assembly lived on the proceeds of dacoity, and had no other means of living. QUEEN v. KENDRA KAMAR

DACOTTY—continued.

8. — Gang of dacoits—Penal Code, s. 400.—It is necessary, in order to establish a charge under s. 400, Penal Code, that the prosecution should make out that there existed at the time specified a gang of persons associated together for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, and that the accused was one of the gang. QUEEN v. MOOKTARAM SIRDAR . . . 23 W. R., Cr., 18

9. — Habitual commission of dacoity and robbery—Penal Code, s. 400.—To support a conviction under s. 400 of the Penal Code, evidence must be given of the existence of a gang of persons, of their association, and association for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity and robbery. [I. C. W. N., 148]

See MANKURA PASI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS

10. — Forceful removal of cows by Hindus from the possession of Mahomedans—Penal Code, s. 395. Knoting.—Where a large body of Hindus, acting in concert and apparently under the influence of religious feeling, attacked certain Mahomedans who were driving cattle along a public road and forcibly deprived them of the possession of such cattle under circumstances which did not indicate any intention of subsequently restoring such cattle to their lawful owners,—Held that the offence of which the Hindus were guilty was dacoity under s. 395 of the Indian Penal Code, and not merely riot. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAM BARAN
[I. L. R., 15 All., 299]

11. — Dacoity with murder—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 395 and 396—Facts necessary to constitute the offence.—In order to support a conviction under s. 396 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to establish, not only that the person accused under that section was committing dacoity conjointly with others, but it must be shown that the murder was committed in his presence. Hence where certain persons were shown to have been concerned in a dacoity in the course of which murder was committed, but it was not shown that they were in the house in which the dacoity was committed at the time the murder took place, and the evidence, if anything, pointed to a contrary conclusion, it was held that the accused could not properly be convicted under s. 396, but only under s. 395, of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. UMRAO SINGH
[I. L. R., 18 All., 437]

12. — Dacoity in the course of which murder is committed—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 396—Facts necessary to establish the offence.—When in the commission of a dacoity murder is committed, it matters not whether the particular dacoit charged under s. 396 of Act XLV of 1860 was inside the house where the dacoity is committed or outside the house, or whether the murder was committed inside or outside the house, so long only as the murder was committed in the commission of that dacoity. Queen-Empress v. Umrao Singh, I. L. R., 16 All., 437, distinguished. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TEJA . . . I. L. R., 17 All., 86

DACOTTY—concluded.

13. — Using deadly weapon in dacoity or robbery—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 397.—A conviction, under s. 397 of the Penal Code, of using a deadly weapon whilst engaged in the commission of robbery or dacoity, is equally good, whether the number of thieves be five or under. QUEEN v. DWARKA AHEER

[2 W. R., Cr., 49]

14. — Commission of grievous hurt in the course of a dacoity—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 397, 34—Person liable under s. 34, liable also under s. 397.—Held that the words "such offender" in s. 397 of the Indian Penal Code include any person taking part in the dacoity who, though he may not himself have struck the blow causing the grievous hurt, is nevertheless liable for the act by reason of s. 34 of the Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MAHABIR TIWARI

1. SUITS FOR DAMAGES.(c) BREACH OF CONTRACT.

1. ——— Breach of contract to put lessee in possession.—A suit will lie for damages sustained by a lessee by his lessor's breach of contract to put him in possession of a portion of the property of which he granted the lease. PIREMOORE SINGH v. AHMED HOSSEIN . . . 7 W. R., 22

2. ——— Liability to repay consideration-money—Cases of action.—Defendants for a consideration granted to plaintiffs a lease of certain churs, which were an accretion to a zamindari, and had been in possession of Government, but were at the time under temporary settlement with the defendants. Subsequently defendants sold their zamindari to a third party, reserving to themselves the chur. Ultimately it was ordered by the Commissioner of Revenue that the churs should be settled, not with defendants, but with the purchasers (the third party), as appertaining to the zamindari. Defendants, having thus become unable to give plaintiffs possession, were sued for a refund of the premium or consideration-money. Held that it was the duty of the defendants to take steps to call in question the decision of the Commissioner, and that their manager's admission of their liability to repay the premium with interest put an end to any claim for damages for the original breach of contract, and constituted a fresh cause of action from which limitation ran. BHOW NATH PAUL CHOWDHRY v. BINGOLA SOONDURRY DOSSIA . . . 15 W. R., 298

3. ——— Suit by partner of lessee for illegal ejectment where he was not a party to the contract of lease.—Where a person becomes surety for the due performance by the lessee of the obligations contained in a lease for a term of years, and afterwards became a partner with the lessee, and the lessor ejected the lessee before the expiration of the lease,—Held that a suit would lie by the surety for damages arising from the illegal ejectment, although the surety was not a party to the original contract with the lessor. BURNODA KANT ROY v. RAM TUNKOO BOSS

[7 W. R., P. C., 51

S. C. BURDAKANTH ROY v. ALUR MUNJOORH DASSIAN . . . 4 Moore's I. A., 321

4. ——— Tenant's right to compensation for eviction—Acquisition of land.—Government took for public purposes a quantity of land, which included four cottages leased by M to plaintiff as the site of an iron foundry. Proceedings with a view to compensation were duly laid, pursuant to Act VI of 1857, and the arbitrators awarded a sum for the whole land and premises, of which sum they gave plaintiff a small part, and the rest to M. Plaintiff, who did not appear before the arbitrators, brought a suit to reimburse himself for loss sustained by having been turned out of his holding, and deprived of the machinery, etc., of his foundry. Held that M as lessor was not answerable for plaintiff's eviction, or for damages on any other ground. MINTO v. KALAN CHUAN DOSS . . . 8 W. R., 327

5. ——— Neglect of tenants to pay road cess or public works cess—Beng. Act I of 1871, s. 25—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 44.—Tenants are liable in damages for neglect to pay road and public works cesses. SARODA PRASAD GANGGOOLY v. PRASUNNO COOMAR SANDIAL

6. ——— Breach of contract in completing purchase—Earnest-money, Right to recover.—D contracted to sell to P a piece of land for Rs. 500, of which he received Rs. 700 as earnest-money. A contract was drawn up, by which D agreed to execute and register a bill of sale, and deposit a part (Rs. 300) of the price, and P was to execute a bond for Rs. 2,000, to bear interest conditioned for the payment of that sum by a fixed date, the transaction to be completed within a specified period. D was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract by the time named, but finding that P would not complete the purchase, but demanded back the earnest-money, he sold the property to a third party for Rs. 800. P then sued to recover the earnest-money and damages. Held that P was bound to show that the circumstances were such as to give him an equitable right to have back the earnest-money, and that, had it not been deposited, D could have justly sued for damages to the extent of the loss incurred by the second sale, and therefore P was not entitled to recover the Rs. 700. RASCOOMAR ROY CHOWDHRY v. DEBENDRONARAIN ROY . . . 15 W. R., 41

7. ——— Contract for sale of immovable property—Breach of such contract—Damages—Costs of suit—Title to be made by vendor.—On the 8th October 1894, the defendant, who was executrix of one M, contracted to sell to the plaintiff a house in Bombay for Rs. 351; the contract to be completed within two months. The plaintiff

paid Rs500 as earnest-money at the date of the contract, and the remainder of the purchase-money was to be paid on the execution of the conveyance. In October, November, and December, the plaintiff's solicitors applied to the defendant for the title-deeds, in order that the conveyance might be prepared; and on the 6th December, the defendant through her solicitors replied that she was ready and willing to execute the conveyance, but could not find the title-deeds. The plaintiff's solicitors then requested to be furnished with an abstract of title, or a statement of the defendant's title to the house, and then they would consider what could be done. No reply to this letter being received, they wrote again on the 10th December 1884, stating that the time for completing the contract had expired; and giving formal notice that, if the defendant did not send the abstract or statement of title within two days, proceedings would be taken to compel specific performance and to recover damages. In reply to this letter, the defendant's solicitors wrote on the 11th December 1884, stating that the defendant had searched for the title-deeds, but had been unable to find them, but that, as soon as they were found, they would be handed over. In the meantime, they were instructed to state that the property was mortgaged to M (of whose will the defendant was executrix) and one K; that K had agreed to convey the property in question to the defendant; and that the deed of conveyance was being prepared. They further stated that, if the plaintiff wished to accept a conveyance without the old title-deeds, the defendant was willing to indemnify him against all claims to the property; but if he was not prepared to do so, the defendant was willing to pay back the earnest-money to him and to rescind the contract. On the 18th December 1884, the plaintiff's solicitors wrote that they could not advise the plaintiff to take the mere conveyance offered, but if the defendant would deposit the purchase-money in a bank in the joint names of the plaintiff and defendant until the title-deeds were found, the plaintiff would complete the purchase at once. They further stated that the plaintiff declined to rescind the contract, and would hold the defendant responsible for loss and costs incurred by the delay. Further correspondence ensued, and a suit was filed on the 20th February 1885, praying for specific performance and Rs500 damages, or that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs2,500 damages, and refund the Rs500 earnest-money. It subsequently transpired that the title-deeds were with K, the co-mortgagee, and they were set forth in the defendant's affidavit of documents filed in July 1885. The defendant, after the suit was filed, sold the property to one J, and K, the co-mortgagee, joined in the conveyance to him. Held that the case was governed by Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. Bl., 1070, and Bain v. Fothergill, 7 Eng. & Ir., Ap., 268, and that the plaintiff could not recover damages for the loss of his bargain. The defendant had offered to do all that lay in her power to carry out her contract, and the case of Engell v. Fitch, L. R., 4 Q. B., 659, did not apply. PITAMBER SUNDARJI v. CASSIBAI

8. ——— Rights of renter of abkari farm—Madras Abkari Act (Madras Act III of 1864), s. 6—Right of Collector to close shops included in the renter's contract—Collector's orders modified by Board of Revenue.—The plaintiff rented from Government an abkari farm, on terms which reserved certain powers of control to the Collector, and obtained a license under the Abkari Act. He did not manage the shops in the contract area himself, nor obtain separate licenses for their management by others. The Collector made orders which were subsequently modified by the Board of Revenue, directing the closing of certain shops which the plaintiff had sublet and directing that others should not be opened. It was found that the Collector's orders were not in excess of the powers reserved to him under the contract, and that they had not been issued arbitrarily or otherwise than in good faith. In a suit for breach of contract and for damages occasioned to the plaintiff by these orders,—Held the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. CHOYI

9. ——— Breach of covenants for title—Voluntary settlement—Consideration.—Though, under the English law, damages may be recovered for breach of covenants for title contained in a voluntary settlement of such a character as to be ineffectual without the assistance of a Court of equity, and which assistance a Court of equity would refuse to a volunteer, yet this depending on the principle of English law, that a document sealed and delivered imports consideration, which principle does not hold as between Hindus, it is open to a defendant to show that the plaintiff is suing on a contract for which there was no consideration other than natural love and affection, which cannot be made the ground of a suit for damages. RAJU BALU v. KRISHNAIAH RAM-CHANDRA . . . I. L. R., 2 Bom., 273

10. ——— Refusal to deliver up child under order of Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 192.—S. 192, Act VIII of 1859, only applied to suits for damages for breach of contract, and did not authorize damages for refusal of a mother to comply with an order of Court to deliver up her daughter. RAJ BEGUM v. BEZA HOSSEIN

[2 W. R., 70]

11. ——— Omission to sue on bond pledged as security.—Held that a suit will not lie for damages against the holder of a bond pledged as security for his omission to sue on that bond within the period of limitation. MAKUND LALL v. BAGHOT PCT DOSS . . . 2 Agra, 68

12. ——— Breach of contract not to sell to stranger—Co-sharers—Specific penalty.—When one of two co-sharers in a property violates a secret engagement between them by selling to a stranger, the other cannot claim a specific penalty, but has his remedy in an action for damages. TOSODOK HOSSEIN v. MRAJAN . . . W. R., 1864, 337

13. — Sale of estate on default of some co-sharers in payment of revenue.—Suit by co-sharer for damages by sale at inadequate price.—A suit will not lie between joint owners of an undivided estate for damages sustained by the plaintiff, by the sale of the estate at an inadequate price, in consequence of the default of the defendants in paying their share of the Government revenue. ODORI ROY v. RADHA PANDIT . 7 W. R., 79

14. — Joint undivided proprietor—Co-sharer.—No suit for damages as between joint owners on undivided estates will lie in consequence of the sale of the whole estate through the default of one or more of such owners in paying their share of the Government revenue. LALLAN RAMSINGH SINGH v. LALLAN BISHEN DOYAL [1 L. R., 1 Cal., 409; 25 W. R., 150]

15. — False representation.—Breach of contract—Husband signing bond for wife without authority—Cause of action.—Where a husband writes and signs a bond in the name of his wife, there is a tacit or implied contract by him that he had authority to do so. If he had not authority, his conduct amounts to misrepresentation, and the obligee may sue for damages for breach of contract or for false representation. ANONYMOUS [18 W. R., 249]

16. — Non-attendance at feast after accepting invitation.—Suit for price of unconsumed food.—Persons accepting an invitation to an entertainment at their neighbour's house and afterwards failing to attend cannot be held liable to a suit for damages for the price of the food unconsumed on account of their absence. KALAI HALDAR v. KYAMUDDI . 23 W. R., 417

17. — Suit after criminal prosecution.—Cheating.—Return of money by Criminal Court as compensation.—Defendant, having contracted to sell two boats to plaintiff for Rs4, received the consideration-money, but did not deliver the boats to the plaintiff, who prosecuted him for cheating in the Criminal Court. The Magistrate convicted him of cheating, and ordered the money which had been obtained by it to be returned to plaintiff. Plaintiff then sued in the Small Cause Court for the value of the boats and for damages for non-delivery of the boats. Held that the suit would not lie. PRONLAD THAWA MANJUN v. DEB NARAIN GHOSH [18 W. R., 247]

(b) TORTS.

18. — Damage by wrongful act —Malice—Injury to legal right.—In the case of damage occasioned by a wrongful act, i.e., an act which the law esteems an injury, the same remedy by action lies against the doer, whether the act was his own, spontaneous and unauthorized, or whether it was done by the order of Government. Malice is not a necessary ingredient to the maintenance of the action. It is essential to an action in tort that the act complained of should, under the circumstances, be legally wrongful as regards the party complaining, that is, it must prejudicially affect him in some legal right: merely that it will, however directly, do him harm in his interests, is not enough. ROOPE v. RAJENDRO DUTT

[2 W. R., P. O., 51; 8 Moore's L. A., 108]

19. — Abetment of tort—Damages for wrongful taking of moveable property.—In actions of wrong, those who abet the tortious acts are equally liable with those who commit the wrong. Regard being had to the constitution of the Courts of this country, which are Courts of justice, equity, and good conscience, a decree-holder should be reimbursed damages for the time during which he is kept out of possession by the wrongful act of another party, whether his claim for subsequent damages be made in the execution of the first decree or in a regular suit. Where a decree is for the delivery of moveable property and states the amount to be paid as an alternative if delivery cannot be had, the goods must be delivered if capable of delivery, but if not capable of delivery, then assessed damages should be paid. KARSEN NATH KOOR v. DEB KRISTO RAWAHOOD DASS . 18 W. R., 240

20. — Suit for damages after decree declaring act wrongful.—A suit will not lie for damages apart from the cause of action out of which the damages arise. MANOVED ABOO v. LALLA BISHEN DIAL . 21 W. R., 154

21. — Suit brought without reasonable or probable cause—Taking up suit after its institution.—In the case of a suit brought without any reasonable or probable cause, where a third party came into the suit and carried it on from the very first,—that is to say, while an application to sue in forma pauperis was pending,—the intervenor's conduct was held to amount to causing the suit to be instituted as well as to carrying it on, and he was held liable to damages for its institution. GOLAB CHAND NOWLUCKHA v. JEEHUN COOMAREE BISHN . 24 W. R., 487

22. — Order made by Magistrate without jurisdiction on bona fide application—Liability for damages.—No man, acting with good faith, and believing that he has a ground for doing so, should be held liable because, upon his application, a Magistrate makes an order which, it afterwards turns out, ought not to have been made. Where certain inhabitants of a village which was flooded applied to the Magistrate to open a bund and let out the water, and the Magistrate without jurisdiction made an order that the bund should be cut, and the bund was cut by police officers,—Held that the applicants were not liable for damages. PORREAO SINGH v. JOHNSON SURAYE . 8 W. R., 111

23. — Order of Magistrate as to nuisance—Injury caused by order—Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV of 1861), s. 309.—Where a Magistrate has made an order under s. 309 of Act XXV of 1861, the party aggrieved thereby cannot sue the parties who instituted the proceedings before the Magistrate for damages, unless he can show

25. — Wrongful distraint of cattle—Cattle Trespass Act, III of 1857, s. 14.—Suits where remedy under Act is barred.—Where a person whose cattle have been illegally distrained fails to take advantage of the remedy provided by s. 14, Act III of 1857, he is not thereby prohibited from bringing an action for damages in a Civil Court. NOMAZ MOLLAH v. LALL MOHUN TAGADGEER
[15 W. R., 279]

26. — Suit for compensation for wrongful seizure of cattle—Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871)—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—A suit for compensation for wrongful seizure of cattle will lie in a Civil Court, the provisions of Act I of 1871 being no bar to such a suit. NOMAZ MOLLAH v. LALL MOHUN TAGADGEER, 15 W. R., 279, approved of. Aslem v. Kalla Durri, 2 C. L. R., 344, dissented from. SHUTTUUGHON DAS COOMAR v. HOKNA SHOWTAL . . . L. L. R., 16 Cal., 159

31. — Persuading wife to absent herself from her husband—Mahomedan law.—A suit for damages is maintainable by a Mussulman against persons who, without lawful excuse, have persuaded and procured his wife to remain absent from him and live separately. A Mussulman lawfully married to a girl who has attained puberty can maintain a suit for damages against the father of the girl, and against an alleged husband of the girl, for wrongfully persuading her to remain absent from the plaintiff's society and for detaining her away from him. MUHAMMAD ISRAHIM v. KRISHNABHAT* [1 L. R., 3 Bom., 333

38. ——— Infringement of right—Exclusive right to perform ceremony.—Where the plaintiff enjoyed the exclusive right of breaking, on a certain day, a curd-pot in a particular part of the temple of Shri Vithoba and Tukaram at Dehu, it was held that the defendants breaking their own curd-pot on that day in any part of that temple was a violation of that right entitling the plaintiff to damages. NARAYAN SADANAND BAVA v. BAL-KRISHNA SHIDESHWAR. 9 Bom., 413

39. ——— Sale of minor's property—Fraud and collusion between vendors and purchasers—Suit by purchasers against vendors when sale is set aside.—It is not for the public benefit that, where two parties knowingly deal with the sale and purchase of property of infants who have not by law the power of sale, one of the parties (the purchasers) who obtain possession of the property in a manner calculated to injure the infants should be able to sue the other party (the vendors) for damages. The Privy Council even refused to give costs to either party, considering them both in pari delicto. BHOOPNARAIN CHOWBEY v. RUGHUNATH GOBIND ROY. 13 W. R., 230

40. ——— Leaving boats in such a position that they are useless until river rises.—A party who wrongfully takes possession of another's boats and places them in such a position that without any neglect on the part of the owner they become unserviceable until the ensuing rainy season is responsible for the consequences of his own act, and is not in any way discharged because the police make over the boats to the owner at a time when there is no water in the river and the boats cannot be moved. *NUDIAR CHAND SHAHA v. decree on the 10th of January 1873, and subsequently to that date entered upon the land and brought a portion of it into cultivation. F, alleging that he was still in possession, sued to recover damages for trespass and injury to the indigo sown by him which was standing on the ground. It was held that B was at liberty to enter upon the land and to cultivate, notwithstanding he had not taken out execution of his decree, and that, if injury occurred to F by B's occupation of the land under his decree, he had no claim on the latter for damages. BASANT KAWAL v. FORTH. 7 N. W., 47

42. ——— Suit for damages for removal of crop—Defendant entitled to possession under decree of a competent Court of revenue—Plaintiff in actual possession under an illegal decree of a Civil Court—Trespass.—A held a decree of a competent Court of revenue for possession of certain land as against B, and obtained under that decree formal possession of that land. B, however, was allowed to remain in such necessary possession of the land as was requisite to enable him to remove a crop which was on the land. B removed his crop, and thereafter sued in a Civil Court for a declaration that he was A's tenant of the land in question holding occupancy rights. A did not defend the suit, and the Civil Court passed a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiff, and further proceeded to execute that declaratory decree by putting B in possession. Subsequently B sued A for damages in respect of the alleged removal by A of a second crop, which he asserted that he (B) had sown upon the said land. Held that B had no cause of action, and that, even if in fact he had sown the crop in respect of which damages were claimed, he did so at his own peril and as a trespasser. UDIT NARAIN SINGH v. SHIB RAI. 1 L. R., 20 All., 186

43. ——— Injury done by raising embankment—Trespass—No proof of specific loss.—Where plaintiffs sought to recover damages for some injury done to their property by an embankment raised by defendants, and pleaded that on a former occasion, on which they had sued for damages against the same defendants for the same trespass, they had obtained a decree, and that the renewal of the offence was a continuance of trespass, it was found that the plaintiffs, on whom the burden of proof of injury lay, had failed to sustain it by proving specific loss. Held that they were, therefore, not entitled to a decree. Held also that the precedents quoted, in which decrees for substantial damages had been given on proof of malicious trespass, although specific injury had not been established, were inapplicable to suits like the present, in which the essence of the plaint was a demand for compensation for losses actually incurred, and in which no hint was thrown out of any malice in the alleged act of trespass. *JUGGUT LALL CHOWBEY v. 47. — Actual loss, Proof of.—Proof of infringement of a right, without proof of actual loss, does not necessarily entitle a plaintiff in this country to a verdict for nominal damages. NARAKRISHNA MOOKERJEE v. COLLECTOR OF HOOGHLY. 2 B. L. R., A. C., 276

48. — Proof of consequent injury.—In order to maintain an action for damages for the infringement of a right, it is not necessary to show that there has been any subsequent injury consequent on such infringement. RAM CHAND CHUCKERBUTTY v. NUDDIAR CHAND GHOSH

49. — Failure to prove injury.—Where defendants infringed plaintiff's legal right, and the lower Court dismissed the suit with costs, on the ground that plaintiff had given no evidence that he had sustained substantial damage.—Held that the plaintiff was entitled at least to a decree without damages and costs. KALLIAPPA KAUNDAN v. VAYAPURI KAUNDAN. 2 Mad., 442

50. — Interest in land—Right of suit.—A erected an embankment across a river, in consequence of which lands let by B to raiyats were overflowed, and the crops lost. 52. — Trespass—Building on plaintiff's land—Mandatory injunction—Suit for further damages for alleged disobedience of mandatory injunction—Cause of action—Right of suit—Execution of decree—Suit to enforce decree.—The defendant having built a wall on the plaintiff's land, the plaintiff brought a suit in which he asked for damages for the trespass and an injunction, and a decree was passed for damages and for a mandatory injunction, directing the defendant within two months to remove the wall, and to restore the plaintiff's premises to their former condition. Two years subsequently the plaintiff brought another suit for damages, alleging his cause of action to be the defendant's disobedience of the mandatory injunction, and proving as damages that people were deterred from becoming his tenants by fearing that, owing to the defendant's previous action, the hillside on which the plaintiff's premises were situate was likely to fall. There was no structural or other damage done to the plaintiff's property other than that which was done prior to the commencement of the previous suit. Held that the suit would not lie for damages for non-compliance with the mandatory injunction, to compel the performance of which the plaintiff had his remedy in execution. Mitchell v. 58. ————— Obstruction in exercise of right over water—Question to decide at trial of suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 197.—A suit may lie for damages for obstruction in the exercise of a right of seu-capio over water, etc., although no property in the tank, etc., be asserted. And s. 197 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to suits for damages of this nature, and consequently the question of the amount of damages must be determined at the trial and cannot be reserved for determination in execution of the decree. RAM-TUNUL LALL v. 59. ————— Cause of action—Right to use of water.—In a suit for damages for the demolition of a singha or embankment intended to keep in surface water, if the embankment was situated on the defendant's land, such demolition could only be a cause of action where it not only infringed a definite right, but caused actual damage. SERTA RAM v. KUMMER ALI . 15 W. R., 250

60. ————— Damage to crops from interference with right of water.—In a suit for damages for loss caused during the years 1862, 1863, and 1864 by defendant's interference with plaintiff's right to the flow of water from a canal. Held, with regard to the loss sustained in 1864, that plaintiff's right to recover depended upon whether or not the special damage claimed had accrued at the time of the bringing of the suit. VISWAMBARA RAJENDRA DEVEN GARU v. SANADHI CHARANA SAMANTARAYA GARU . 3 Mad., 111

61. ————— Use of water—rights—Injury to neighbouring land.—The defendant closed up the outlets of a bank upon his own land, whereby the surface drainage water had immemorially flowed from the plaintiff's land into and over the defendant's land, and so escaped. By reason of the closing of these outlets, the water was unable to escape, and the plaintiff's land became flooded and the crops therein damaged. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain a suit to recover from the defendant the amount of damages he had sustained by reason of the ancient flow of the water from his land being thus impeded. Held also that in a suit for damages sustained by such an act done on the defendant's own land, actual damage to the plaintiff must be shown in order to sustain an action; and that the liability of the plaintiff to remit the rents of raiyats whose crops were spoiled was sufficient damage. ANUNDMOYE DASSEE v. 64. ————— Abuse and defamation—Malice—Estimation of damages.—If defamatory expressions are used under such circumstances as to induce in the plaintiff reasonable apprehension that his reputation has been injured, and to inflict on him pain consequent on such belief, the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages without actual proof of loss sustained. Vindictive damages should not be awarded, and a distinction should be drawn in awarding damages when the defendant acts from carelessness, and when he acts maliciously. In the latter case the plaintiff is entitled to full compensation for the pain suffered, and in the former to a sum sufficient to establish his innocence of the charges made. PARVATHI v. MANNAH . DAMODHAR GOVIND
[9 Bom., 92]

73. ————— Attachment of property of third person—Liability of execution-creditor for wrongful seizure in execution of decree.—There is not any universal rule that a judgment-creditor is, or that he is not, liable in suit for a wrongful seizure, or for injury to the goods while under seizure. His liability must depend upon the circumstances of the case, i.e., upon the fact whether the wrongful seizure or the injury is the result of his own conduct; for instance, if the judgment-creditor personally, or his authorised agent (ex. gr., his pleader), apply, under s. 214 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the attachment of property which is specially designated in that application, and if the Court grant its warrant for the seizure of that particular property, and the officer of the Court execute the warrant, and the property be not that of the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor would certainly be liable for that wrongful seizure, and the officer of the Court could justify under the warrant, and would not be liable so long as he kept within the duty expressly prescribed for him by it. But if the application of the judgment-creditor were for a general attachment under s. 218 of the Code, and the Court took no such security from him as it might take under that section, and if the Court granted a general warrant for the attachment of the moveable property of the judgment-debtor, and the officer of the Court, without any suggestion to that effect from the judgment-creditor or his agent, beyond a general direction to execute the warrant, were to seize property not belonging to the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor would not be responsible. Quere—Whether, under such circumstances as those last mentioned, the officer of the Court would be responsible. VANA JAGANNATHJI v. HATA DIPAJI . 11 Bom., 46

74. ————— Penalty—Compensation—Proof of malice.—Certain hundres, which V A & Co. had discounted for P, having been dishonoured by the drawers, V A & Co. sued P for the value of the bills, and applied, under s. 81, Code of Criminal Procedure, to have certain property attached before judgment as belonging to P. An attachment having been ordered, M and J objected by petition that the property belonged to them, and not to P, upon which V A & Co. applied to have them made co-defendants in the regular suit which had been brought against P, on the ground that they (M and J) and P were partners in trade. The decision in the suit released the property on the ground that there was no such partnership, and that the property belonged exclusively to M and J. M and J then sued V A & Co. to recover damages sustained by their goods under the above attachment and profits foregone during the stoppage of their trade by the tortious acts of the defendants. Held that, as V A & Co. had made the attachment most carelessly and recklessly, and without sufficient or reasonable ground for assuming M and J to be partners of P, they were rightly amerced in damages. Held also that their act, having been one done without a probable cause, was such as to evince a malicious motive on their part, and that damages in such a case should be in the nature of a penalty as well as of a compensation. Held further that plaintiffs were not bound to release their property, and it was no defence to their claim for damages to say that they might have done so by giving security, nor could their declining to do so shift the responsibility of the illegal acts of the defendants. VALANT ALI KHAN v. MATADHER RAM . 13 W. R., 3

75. ————— Attachment before judgment without sufficient cause.—Where a Court orders attachment of a defendant's property after it is satisfied that he is about to remove or dispose of it with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of the decree, it must be presumed that there was good and sufficient cause for the plaintiff having moved the Court to do so, even though the suit resulted unsuccessfully; and unless the contrary can be established, damages cannot be claimed. DHURMO NARAIN SANKU v. SUREMUTTY DASSEE

76. ———— Attachment made contrary to order.—When a proper application for process has been made and a proper order granted, the officer of Court cannot be considered to be the agent of the person for whose benefit the process of the Court has issued. Nor is such person responsible for the mistake or misconduct of the officer, unless he or his servants have personally interfered and directed the action of the officer. Where, in a suit for damages for wrongful attachment, it appeared that the defendant, in execution of a decree against a boat-owner, had obtained an order for attachment, by prohibitory order under s. 234 of Act VIII of 1859, of certain boats which had been hired by the plaintiff to take a cargo to Calcutta, and they were wrongly attached under s. 233 by actual seizure and detention, during which one of them sank and was lost,—Held that, unless it could be shown that the defendant or his servants personally interfered and caused the officer of Court to attach the boats by actual seizure, he was not liable for damages. DOOLAE CHAND SARKOO v. RAM SANKU BHUGOOT 24 W. R., 139

77. ———— Attachment of property of third person under general warrant of execution.—Where A seizes property in attachment of a decree which had been obtained by his own judgment-debtor, and there is nothing to show that that decree was sold to B, and A is not proved to have acted maliciously or without probable cause, A is not liable to B in a suit for damages. The seizure, moreover, having been made under the order of the Court, the defendant was not liable for what was done under the Court's order. Semble—Whether, if a judgment-creditor applies for a general warrant of attachment of all the defendant's property under s. 214, and under it causes property of a third person to be seized as property of the defendant, he is not liable to such third person. JOYKALIE DASSEE v. CHANDMALLA 9 W. R., 122

78. ———— Warrant of execution.—A party is not liable to damages in respect of an attachment under a warrant issued by a Court. RAJBULLUS GOPE v. ISHAN CHANDRA HAZRAH

[7 W. R., 355]

79. ———— Permission to use property attached—Principles in action of tort.—The proposition that a man whose possession was unlawfully invaded by a wrongful attachment ought to have given effect to that invasion, because it was made under colour of legal process, by removing the lock of his own store-house, is untenable; and though the plaintiff might have received permission to use his own property, he was neither bound to accept the permission so accorded to him, nor, if he had accepted it, would he have lost his right of action, and he was entitled, at the very least, to a judgment for nominal damages. The principle ordinarily applicable to actions of tort is that the plaintiff is never precluded from recovering ordinary damages by reason of his failing to prove the special damage he has laid, unless the special damage is the gist of the action. *Le Breton v. Ennis, 4 Moore's P. C. 80. ———— Omission to claim compensation under Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 88.—The omission to apply for compensation under s. 88, Act VIII of 1859 (assuming that section to be applicable to the present case), does not bar a regular suit for compensation for illegal attachment; and the fact that security was not given, by which release of the property might have been obtained, does not affect the right of suit for the improper attachment. Further that, under the circumstances, the attachment being needless and unjustifiable and without due authority of law, the award of damages was fair and unquestionable. DANIEL v. MONUN BIEER 1 Agra, 104

81. ———— Transfer of decree—Subsequent attachment in execution against transferor—Right to compensation.—A transferred a decree to B, who recovered part of the amount due under it, and was prevented from recovering the rest by an attachment of the decree in execution proceedings against A. Held that A was liable to pay compensation to B. PUTHIANDI MAMMED v. AVAILI MOIDIN

82. ———— Wrongful injunction—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 96 (1877-82, s. 497).—Compensation for injunction.—S. 96 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859 (s. 497 of 1877-82), allowed the power of bringing a suit for damages, leaving that remedy to those who did not wish to take advantage of the remedy provided by that section. WILSON v. KANHYA SARKOO 11 W. R., 143

83. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 92, 96—Suit for compensation—Cause of action.—A, having brought a suit against B, obtained and issued, on the 24th July 1868, an injunction against him under s. 92, Act VIII of 1859. The suit was, on the 18th of August 1868, dismissed; but no compensation was awarded to B, under s. 96 of Act VIII of 1859, in respect of the injunction which had been issued against him. A and B both appealed, the former against the decision dismissing his suit, the latter for compensation. Both appeals were dismissed on the 23rd November 1869; B's because it was engrossed on a stamp paper of the value of eight annas only. B, on the 16th December 1869, then instituted a suit against A in the Small Cause Court for damages in consequence of the injunction which A had caused to issue against him in his suit. Held that B was not debarred, by s. 96 of Act VIII of 1859, from instituting a suit against A for damages, there not having been an award of compensation under that section. The cause of action accrued from the time at which the plaintiff was first damaged by the wrongful injunction, continued as long as the injunction remained in force, and limitation began to run as soon as the injunction was at an end. NANDA KUMAR SHANHA v. GAUR SANKAR . 5 B. L. R., Ap., 4: 13 W. R., 206

2. MEASURE AND ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES.(a) BREACH OF CONTRACT.

84. ——— Suit for non-delivery of goods.—In a suit for the non-delivery of goods agreed to be sold by the defendant to the plaintiff in a case where no money has passed, the measure of damages is in general the difference (if any) between the agreed price and the market value on the day when the goods ought to have been delivered. SHARMAN v. GOUD SHAN BANGALLY . March, 542

85. ——— Omission to specify time.—In an action by a vendee against a vendor for non-performance of a contract to deliver goods which specifies no time for delivery, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and that which goods of a like description bore on the lapse of a reasonable time for delivery. MANBUX DASS v. RANGAYYA CHETTI 1 Mad., 162

86. ——— Reasonable time for delivery.—In an action by the vendee against the vendor for breach of a contract to deliver goods "in two or three days," the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the price which similar goods bore on the lapse of a reasonable time for delivery, not less than three days from the date of the contract. RAM MADAUJI v. BANGA CHETTI 1 Mad., 168

87. ——— Delay in delivery of goods by carrier.—The damages claimable in a suit against a carrier on account of delay in delivering goods are the excess which is found by comparing the price of the goods on the day they ought to have been delivered with the price on the day when they were delivered. BULDO DASS v. NATHOO MULL 2 Agra, 122

88. ——— Forbearance of buyer at seller's request.—The defendants, by bought and sold notes, contracted, in February 1877, to sell to the plaintiffs 200 tons of wheat, delivery under the contract to be given during all April on 16 days' notice from the buyers. Notice was given on the 9th of April, but the defendants were unable to give delivery within the agreed time, and the plaintiffs, on the 11th May, instructed their attorneys to demand immediate payment of the difference between the contract price, and the then market price, treating the contract as rescinded. Subsequently, the defendants being prepared to give delivery of 350 bags, the plaintiffs agreed to take delivery without "prejudice to their right of claim against the sellers on account of the remaining 175 tons still undelivered." This and several other parcels, making altogether 113 out of the 200 tons, were delivered during the latter part of May; but on the 31st of May plaintiffs refused to take further deliveries, alleging that the quality of the wheat offered was inferior, and brought a suit for damages for the non-delivery under the contract of the remaining 87 tons. Held that there was no binding agreement on the part of the plaintiffs to give time for the fulfilment of the contract after April, but merely a forbearance on their part to pursue their rights, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the full measure of damages. Ogle v. Vane, L. R., 2 Q. B., 278, and Freith v. Burr, L. R., 9 C. P., 208, cited and followed. GLADSTONE v. SEWBY 4 C. L. R., 106

89. ——— Action for breach of collateral contract—Non-acceptance of goods.—The defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiffs to purchase from them a quantity of gunny bags, of which the defendant was to take delivery at certain stated times. On failure by the defendant to take delivery, the plaintiffs brought a suit for breach of the contract, estimating the damages at the difference between the contract price and the market prices on the days when the defendant ought to have taken delivery. It was proved that the plaintiffs never had the goods in their possession, but that they could have obtained them under a contract they had with a third person, and it was found that the plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver them at the time contracted for. The lower Court held that the measure of damages was the difference between the contract price of the bags and the amount which it cost the plaintiffs under their collateral contract to procure and deliver them. Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the proper measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and the market prices at the dates of failure by the defendant to take delivery. COWEN v. CASSIM NANA

90. ——— Failure to deliver timber—Place of delivery.—The plaintiff brought a suit at Tonghoo in British Burma to recover possession of certain timber, which he alleged the defendants had, wrongfully and in collusion with the Burmese Governor of Ninghan, taken out of his possession in foreign territory and removed to Tonghoo. The defendants stated that they had acquired the timber from the Governor of Ninghan in terms of an agreement between them and the Burmese Government. It appeared that the Governor of Ninghan had confiscated the plaintiff's timber in contravention of a royal mandate. After the institution of the suit, the defendants removed the timber from Tonghoo to Rangoon. The Court below having fixed the price of the timber at Rangoon as the alternative damages in case of non-delivery, the High Court refused to interfere with such award. BOMBAY-BURMAH TRADING CORPORATION v. 91. ——— Failure to supply wood when required—Omission to make requisition.—In a suit for damages for breach of contract to supply wood which defendant had engaged to supply for the construction of a house, where the intention was found to have been that the plaintiff should from time to time give defendant notice of the different articles of wood-work required.—Held that the defendant was only liable for damages to the extent of the wood which he did not supply according to the order given to him, not for the wood for which requisition had not been made. RADNA GOVIND SHANA v. LEAM BUKSH OSTAOU 15 W. R., 217

82. ——— Bailment—Misappropriation of Government promissory notes—Negligence of Treasury Officer.—The agent of the plaintiff delivered to the Treasury Officer at Meerut nine Government promissory notes, aggregating Rs48,000 in value, in order that such notes might be transmitted to the Public Debt Office at Calcutta for cancellation and consolidation into a single note for Rs48,000, having previously indorsed the plaintiff's name on such notes at the request of a subordinate of the Treasury Officer, and received a receipt for such notes under the hand of the Treasury Officer. Owing partly to such indorsements and partly to the negligence of the Treasury Officer, such subordinate was enabled to misappropriate and negotiate two of such notes, aggregating Rs12,000 in value. The remaining seven of such notes were despatched to Calcutta, and a consolidated note for Rs36,000 was returned and delivered to the plaintiff, when the misappropriation of the two notes was discovered. The plaintiff sued Government, claiming "that it might be directed to make restitution of the two notes or deliver two other notes of equal value or their value in cash" with interest. On behalf of Government it was contended that it was not liable to the plaintiff's claim, inasmuch as the plaintiff, by his agent, had contributed to the loss of the two notes, and a master was not liable in damages for loss or injury sustained through the fraud or dishonesty of his servant without the scope of his employment. Held that the two notes not having been delivered to the Treasury Officer as a bailee, but having been surrendered, the receipt given by that officer must be regarded as an undertaking on the part of Government to deliver a consolidated note for Rs48,000 in due course, and the plaintiff's suit was in reality one for damages on account of the refusal of Government to discharge its obligation, the measure of those damages being the amount by which the note for Rs36,000 fell short of Rs48,000 with interest, and such being the suit, the contention of Government was not any answer to it. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. SHRO SINGH RAI I. L. R., 9 All., 780

83. ——— Failure to deliver steamer according to contract—Loss of freight—Charter-party.—The plaintiff entered into a contract of charter-party with the defendants, whereby it was agreed between them and defendants "acting for the owners" that "the steamer Atoll, now on her passage to Calcutta, being tight, staunch, and strong, etc., shall receive on board from the charterers a complete cargo of merchandises, to consist of 700 tons dead weight, etc., and being so laden shall therewith proceed to London, with liberty to call for any legal purpose at any intermediate port or ports, etc., freight to be paid on the above cargo on right delivery of the same at and after the rate of £4 2s. 6d. per ton. Charterers to have the option of cancelling the charter-party, if the steamer has not arrived in Calcutta on the 15th April 1871." The defendants signed the charter-party as "agent of steamer Atoll." The steamer was not, at the time the charter-party was entered into, on her way to Calcutta, being then in the port of London, and she did not start for some days after the date of the charter-party. She touched at Madras and Colombo on her way, and did not arrive in Calcutta until 11th April. Rates of freight having declined since the middle of March, at which time, it was alleged, the steamer ought to have arrived, the plaintiffs sued the defendants for damages. Held the defendants were liable. The measure of damages was the difference between the value the steamer would have been to the plaintiffs as an instrument for earning freight at market prices, if she had been put at their disposal at the time when she ought to have been under the contract, i.e., a fortnight or three weeks earlier, and what she was worth to them in the same view at the time when she actually was delivered. SCHILLER v. FINLAY

84. ——— Failure to ship goods according to contract—Freight—Expenses of carriage—Sub-charterers.—Where the defendant agreed to ship goods for a certain port, in a ship of which the plaintiffs were the sub-charterers, but failed to ship any portion of the goods, and the plaintiffs were unable to obtain any freight.—Held, in an action to recover the whole amount of the freight which would have been payable to the plaintiffs if the contract had been carried out, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover as damages a sum equivalent to the entire freight agreed to be paid by the defendant for the goods in question, after deducting therefrom a proportionate part of the expenses of carriage which had been saved by reason of the service not having been rendered. Held also that the sum payable by the plaintiffs to the original charterers of the vessel for the intended voyage ought not to be deducted from the sum payable by the defendant, as the damages payable by the defendant must depend upon his own contract with the plaintiffs, and not upon the terms of the bargain between the plaintiffs and the original charterers. DE ANGLIS & Co. v. MAYAPPA SETTY

85. ——— Breach of warranty—Sale of special machine.—The plaintiff applied to the defendant to sell him an ice-making machine capable of turning out 100 sacks of pure ice per hour. The defendant supplied a machine which he represented as capable of turning out the required amount of ice. It was in evidence that the machine was to be set up at Allahabad; that the defendants had undertaken not to sell another machine of the same sort to any one at Allahabad, so that practically the plaintiff would have had a monopoly, or nearly so, as an ice purveyor at that station. The ice machine turned out eventually a quantity much less than 100 seers a day. Held that the plaintiff was entitled as damages to the amount paid for the machine, the expenses of ascertaining whether it would turn out 100 seers a day, and reasonable interest on the whole; the defendants to be at liberty to take back the machine. LAMOUROUX v. BVILLE. 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 274

95. — Suit for breach of contract to admit into partnership—Partnership for specified time.—In a suit brought for damages for breach of a contract to admit the plaintiff into partnership, Held that the damages to be awarded, although they should be estimated with reference to the profits which the plaintiff might ultimately have derived from the partnership, ought not to have been assessed at such a sum as would place the plaintiff in the position which he might have held at the conclusion of the partnership. Where the partnership was to endure for two years, Held that one year's profits would be a fair award of damages. LEWIN v. MORRISON. 2 Agrs, Pt. II, 151

97. — Failure to pay calls on shares—Agreement to forfeit shares.—Where a party takes shares in a trading company, agreeing to forfeit his shares if he does not pay calls upon them at certain stated intervals, the penalty of forfeiture should be enforced against him if the calls are not paid according to agreement. The damages should not be measured by the amount of the call. ACHUMBIT SHAHA v. ROHMOONISSA alias BIBE NOOR JAN [24 W. R., 359]

98. — Breach of contract to register document—Nature of suit.—A pottah granting an ijara and a kabuliati in similar terms having been executed respectively by and exchanged between the plaintiffs and the defendant, when the parties went to register the pottah the defendant refused to allow it to be registered, alleging that the plaintiffs had not performed certain conditions which were incumbent on them before they were entitled to the ijara. In a suit for a refund of the deposit money and for damages, Held that the suit was brought, not on the pottah and kabuliati, but on an implied contract by the defendant to do that which was necessary to give effect to his own pottah, viz., to allow it to be registered, and that the real question was whether the plaintiffs had done all that they were required to do to entitle them to the assent of the defendant to registration. As the pottah had been executed and handed over, if it specified no pre-requisite conditions, the natural presumption was that no such conditions existed, although that presumption might be rebutted by sufficient evidence. Damages for a breach of a contract of this kind, though not necessarily the same as for keeping a person out of possession, would yet be the loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the contract not having been performed. Held further that, although the amount the refund of which was sued for was in fact in deposit for the rents of the old lease which had not yet expired, yet, as the defendant had abandoned that lease and entered into a new arrangement as regarded the deposit, he could not now fall back on the old contract once abandoned, nor could he retain the money under the new contract which he had wrongfully refused to carry out. MONOMOTHONATH DEX v. BAREKATH GHOSH. 20 W. R., 107

99. — Breach of contract to convey immovable property.—Where a vendor, having agreed to convey, without any reasonable excuse conveys the property to a third party in order to obtain a higher price, the vendee is entitled by way of damages to the additional price obtained by the sale. THILOKHYA NATH BISWAS v. JOY KALI CHOWDHRAI. 11 C. L. R., 454

100. — Refusal to execute lease as agreed—Amount of rent agreed on.—Under an indenture of lease, A and B covenanted to give C and D possession of premises comprised therein. The lease was executed by A, C, and D, and B's assent was comprised therein, but he refused to execute. On breach by A, in an action for damages against A and B, Held B was not liable; but as against A, there being no allegation of special damage, the measure of damages would be the difference between the rack rent and the rent that was agreed to be paid. GO-BRAPHONE DASS v. NITTANUND MCLLICK [1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 41]

101. — Refusal to give lease as agreed—Nominal damages.—A party who took from certain proprietors of an estate a lease of their interest therein without advances or premium, not having been put in possession and finding another party in possession with an adverse title, commenced a suit against him, which was unsuccessful. He then sued the lessors and their representatives for damages to recover the expenses of the litigation, and the whole of the profits he had expected from the lease. Held that the plaintiff had no right to recover from the lessors the expenses of the litigation, and as it was not contended that the lessors had wilfully misrepresented things, he was entitled only to nominal damages. MAHOMED KHA KHAN v. KESRUB LAL [14 W. R., 366]

102. — Breach of clause in lease—Rent suit—Substantial damage—Nominal damage.—B obtained a lease of certain lands from A, agreeing thereunder to pay to A a certain rental for the land, and also a sum of Rs183-6-3 yearly to A's superior landlord, obtaining a receipt therefor. A sued B for the rent due to himself and for the sum due to his superior landlord. Held that A was entitled to recover the sum due to his superior landlord as damages for breach of the contract, and that the amount of such damages ought not to be taken as nominal, but should be assessed on the footing of the sum for which A might become liable to his superior landlord. RUTNESSUR BISWAS v. 100. ——— Contract assigning mortgage rights—Interest—Guarantee of loss.—Defendants assigned their mortgage rights under two deeds to plaintiff, stipulating to make good any loss which the latter might sustain by reason of the opposition or resistance of the mortgagors. Plaintiff, in a suit against the mortgagors, failing to establish one of the mortgages, sued the original mortgagors to recover damages with interest and costs incurred by him in a suit against the mortgagors. Held that the measure of damages or loss to which the plaintiff was entitled was not the sum paid by him as consideration, but the value of the thing which he had been deprived of; and that, the suit being in its nature a suit for unliquidated damages, plaintiff was not entitled to the interest on the sum awarded as damages. PARBUTTI v. MISSER CHIMMUN LALL. 1 Agra, 89

104. ——— Suit for damages for being kept out of indigo factory—Calculation of damages.—Suit for damages sustained by plaintiff during the period she was out of possession of an indigo factory with appurtenances. Held that the lower Court was right in taking, as the basis of its calculation of damages, a bond fide agreement entered into between the plaintiff and her lessors, showing the amount of rent which she would have received yearly but for the illegal act of the defendant; that, as the indigo land was an appurtenance to the factory, by ousting the plaintiff from the factory all benefit derivable from chur lands fit only for indigo was lost by her, and that the sum which represented that loss had been rightly included in the calculation of damages to which plaintiff was entitled. HURISH CHUNDER KOONDOL v. BAMA KALAN DEBIA. 5 W. R., 194

105. ——— Breach of contract to cultivate indigo—Agreement to deliver indigo—Risk of loss in manufacture.—Where a raiyat took advances from a planter for the cultivation of indigo, stipulating to deliver a certain number of bundles of the plant, and further stipulating that, if he failed to do so by neglecting to cultivate or cut, he would pay as damages the price of manufactured indigo for the bundles ascertained to be due.—Held that, if the raiyat's failure to supply the bundles stipulated for arose through his neglect to cultivate, he was bound to pay as damages the profit which the planter would have derived from converting the indigo plant, which ought to have been delivered, into indigo, and selling that indigo at a fair price, the risk of failure in the course of manufacture to be reckoned in estimating the damages. HILLS v. BUDU KHAN. 12 W. R., 583

106. ——— Made of performance—First failure to sow.—In a suit for damages for breach of contract to cultivate indigo.—Held (1) that, if the raiyats sowed at any time in the sowing season within three years of the institution of the suit, they could not be deemed to have committed a breach of contract, and that, therefore, the cause of action on such breach of contract could not commence before the close of the sowing season. (2) That only one set of damages for one breach of contract alone could be recovered, and not a separate set of damages for each breach of failure to do each of all the various acts specified. (3) That such stipulated damages should be for one year only, i.e., that the first breach involved a liability to pay once, and once only, the stipulated damages, and that the contract ceased and determined therewith. 107. ——— Bengal Regulation VI of 1823, s. 5, cl. 2.—Held that the limit of damages recoverable under cl. 4, Regulation VI of 1823, was three times the sum advanced, and that the amount of advance itself could not be included or considered, except as the mode of measuring the damages. ZIN-OD-DEEN v. WRIGHT. 13 Agra, 77

108. ——— Bengal Regulation VI of 1823, s. 5, cl. 4.—When a breach of contract to sow indigo arises, not from accident, but presumably from dishonesty, the case no longer falls within cl. 4, s. 5, Regulation VI of 1823, which limited the amount of penalty to three times the sum advanced, but the plaintiffs were entitled to recover an amount of damages not exceeding the sum which the defendant stipulated to pay on failure by him to perform his contract. LAL MAHOMED BISWAS v. 109. ——— Bengal Regulation VI of 1823—Fraud.—It is not imperative on the Courts, in cases of breach of contract for the supply of indigo plant, according to the provisions of Regulation VI of 1823, to award three times the amount of the advance. Where the breach is not fraudulent, the penalty should be adjudged with reference to the extent of the injury sustained, but not exceed three times the sum advanced. Where the breach is fraudulent, the extent of the injury sustained is, without any restriction whatever, the standard for regulating the amount awardable. DALEER SINGH v. 110. ——— Liquidated damages.—By a contract for the cultivation of indigo, the defendants agreed, in consideration of certain payments, to prepare the land, sow the seeds that should be supplied, and reap the crops; and it was stipulated that in case the defendant should neglect to cultivate the lands, the amiah of the factory might cultivate them, and deduct the expense from the money payable to the defendant, and that, if the lands were not prepared for the seed at the time of the full moon in the month of Magh, "in consequence of the loss of indigo and its profits, the defendant should pay compensation at the rate of twelve sicca rupees per bigha." Held that the stipulation for the payment by the defendant of twelve sicca rupees per bigha, in the event of the land not being prepared for seed by the time mentioned, was a reservation in the nature of liquidated damages; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover more than that sum in respect of the breach of that stipulation, although loss to a greater extent may have been sustained. MACRAE v. JHOMUCK MISSEN [March, 306: 2 Hay, 391]

111. — Measure of damages.—In estimating the measure of damages to be paid for breach of contract to cultivate indigo, the period of the breach should be taken as the time for estimating the damages. Generally, the natural and immediate consequence of the breach of contract should alone be looked to, and not some possible remote result. Supposed profits ought not to be given as part of the damages, unless under special and extraordinary circumstances. ZENUTTUNISSA v. TOMES . . . W. R., 1864, 251

114. — Liquidated damages.—In a suit to recover damages under a kaluliat, in which defendant had engaged to sow and cultivate indigo, and in case of failure to pay as damages a specified sum for every year,—Held that the amount agreed to be paid should be treated as liquidated damages, and not as a penalty. *LEDLIE v. paid will be treated as liquidated damages, and not as penalty. In a suit for breach of contract it is open to the defendant to plead in that suit (without being obliged to bring a fresh suit) that the plaintiff, being the first to break the agreement, cannot now sue for damages for something subsequently done by the defendant in contravention of it. ASHKUTUNISSA BEGUM v. LUCKES JELANES . . . 9 W. R., 212

119. — Compensation for breach of contract—Contract Act, s. 74.—Where a kobala is not executed within the stipulated date, an intending purchaser is not entitled to compensation under the Contract Act, s. 74, unless he can show that he tendered the purchase-money and the bond, together with a draft of the kobala, to the opposite party, who then refused to execute. FUKER AHMED v. ISSUR CHUNDER DAS . . . 20 W. R., 481

120. — Liquidated damages—Penalty—Measure of damages—Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), s. 74.—Under s. 74 of the Contract Act, 1872, the Courts are not bound, even in cases where the parties to a contract have, in anticipation of a breach, expressly determined by agreement what shall be the sum payable as damages for the breach, to award such sum for a breach, but may award for the same "reasonable compensation" not exceeding such sum. As a general principle, compensation must be commensurate with the injury sustained. Acting upon this principle, when the injury consists of a breach of contract, the Court would assess damages with a view of restoring to the injured party such advantages as he might reasonably be expected to have derived from the contract had the breach not occurred. Held therefore, where the parties to a contract to deliver a certain quantity of raw indigo on a certain day agreed that a certain sum should be paid as compensation in case such indigo was not delivered as agreed, that the method of assessing damages in case of a breach of the contract would be to ascertain the quantity of indigo which could have been pressed out of the stipulated amount of indigo plant, to ascertain the price at which the indigo might have been fairly sold in the market during the season to which the contract related, and to deduct from such price the ordinary charges of producing and selling the quantity of indigo in question, and that more than the amount so ascertained ought not equitably to be awarded, such amount being "reasonable compensation" for a breach of the contract. Srigopal Pal Chowdhry v. Bengal Indigo Company, W. R., 1884, p. 354, is presumably overruled by the cases under the Contract Act, s. 74. NAIR RAM v. SHIN DAT. I. L. R., 5 All., 239

122. ———— Contract Act, ss. 73, 74—Interest—Agreement to lend money—Damages recoverable by lender for breach of such agreement.—The plaintiff, a money-lender, by a written agreement agreed to lend the defendant the sum of Rs 20,000 at 7½ per cent. per annum for three years on the security of certain lands. From the evidence it appeared that the loan was to have been advanced on the 1st March 1887, and that the plaintiff's attorneys had prepared necessary deeds, which were ready on that day for execution by the defendant. The plaintiff had on that day withdrawn Rs 20,000 from his bankers, where it had been lying in deposit, bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and his munim took it to the attorney's office for payment to the defendant. The defendant, however, did not attend, and on the following day the money was paid in again to the plaintiff's bankers at the same rate of interest as before. The defendant failed to take the loan, and the plaintiff sued him for breach of the agreement. He claimed as damages interest on the Rs 20,000 at 14 per cent. per annum for the three years for which under the agreement the loan was to be made. Held that he was not entitled to interest for three years, but only to interest for such period as might reasonably be required to find another borrower of the Rs 20,000 at the rate of interest agreed upon between him and the defendant. The Court accordingly awarded him interest at 14 per cent. per annum (i. e., the difference between the banker's rate of interest and the contract rate) on Rs 20,000 for four months, together with the expense of preparing the deeds required for the purpose of the loan. *DATURNAI KRISHNA v. taken under the Collector's management under s. 236 of the Code of Civil Procedure. 124. ———— Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Penalty—Liquidated damages—Stipulation to pay sum named in case of breach—Reasonable compensation for breach.—Plaintiff and defendant, who were jointly interested in a sal forest, entered into an agreement by which they bound themselves not to cut down any tree in the forest for the next ten years and in case of any breach committed by anyone of them to pay a penalty of Rs 500. The principal defendant having cut down certain trees in violation of the agreement, the plaintiff brought this suit for the recovery of compensation for the trees so cut down and also his share of Rs 500, the stipulated penalty for the breach of the agreement. The lower Court gave a decree only for the value of the trees which they would have ten years hence if they had not been cut down. Held that s. 74 of the Contract Act has done away with the distinction between penalty and liquidated damages, and has left it to the Court, in cases where a sum is named to be paid in case of breach, to award a reasonable compensation not exceeding the sum named. That in this case the value of the trees cut down cannot be regarded as a measure for assessing the damages. The lower Court should have fixed some reasonable sum, not exceeding Rs 500, the amount stipulated, as would be likely to prevent any future breach. *Nair Ram v. Shin Dat, I. L. Shape of claim—Amendment of plaint.—The plaintiffs under several contracts with the defendant produced by manufacture goods answering to the description of the contracts and appropriated them to the several contracts. On notice of the production of the goods being given to the defendant, he directed the goods so appropriated to be marked and despatched for shipment according to certain instructions. The plaintiffs carried out these instructions, but the goods could not be shipped, as the vessels in which they were to be shipped were not available at their usual place. Held the ownership in the goods was transferred to the defendant, and the plaintiffs became entitled under s. 107 of the Contract Act, after due notice to resell them on the defendant's refusal to take delivery and to recover as damages the difference between the contract price of the goods and the price at which they were resold. See also—The proper course to be adopted, when it is sought to shape a claim for damages differently from what appears in the plaint, is to amend the plaint and add a claim for damages on the basis of that amendment. Then at the trial evidence may be given in support of the amended statement. But that course ought not to be allowed to be adopted after the plaintiffs have once closed their case and the defendants have been called on to meet the claim as originally framed in the plaint. *Yule & Co. v. B was a party with A to the contract, though he was not expressly mentioned therein. A assigned his share in the contract to C. B, as first plaintiff, and C, as second plaintiff, brought a suit against the defendants alleging that the defendants had failed to fulfil their part of the contract during the second year of its continuance (1886), and praying (1) that all the defendants be directed to deliver to the plaintiffs the salt collected during 1886; (2) that defendants 2, 4, and 7 should be held liable for any damages plaintiffs might suffer through a fall in the price of salt. The Court of first instance, having held that the contract contained seven separate and distinct contracts, each defendant having contracted with reference to his own pans only, decreed (1) that the seven defendants should pay damages at the rate of Rs-12-0 per garce for the salt collected by each during the years 1886 to 1889, leaving the quantity to be ascertained in the execution of the decree; (2) that the defendants should pay the plaintiffs' costs. On appeal, the District Judge modified the decree by fixing the rate of damages at Rs-10-0 for each garce of salt. Held on appeal that the suit was bad for misjoinder, since the case of each defendant, as a party to a distinct contract, should be decided on its own merits; that the decrees of the lower Courts were bad in making all the defendants jointly and severally liable for costs, and for damages for other years than the year 1886, and in not ascertaining the amount of damages payable by each defendant; that the measure of damages was what the plaintiffs had lost by the breach of contract, but that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in applying the rate fixed on this principle to each defendant without ascertaining the particular nature of the breach of which each defendant was guilty. NAMASIVAYA GURUKKAL v. 132. — Agreement to discharge a debt due by debtor to a third party.—No time fixed for performance.—Failure to perform within a reasonable time.—Cause of action.—Defendant agreed to discharge a debt due by plaintiff to a third party, secured by a mortgage of a village which was held by plaintiff on lease and which had been sub-let by him to defendant after the mortgage to the third party had been granted. The agreement provided that, if the defendant failed to discharge the debt, he should be liable to plaintiff for any damage which the latter might sustain. No time was fixed for the performance by the defendant of this obligation, and he, in fact, failed to perform it for a period of nearly three years, whereupon the suit was brought. Held that the agreement was not a mere contract to indemnify; that defendant was bound to discharge the debt within a reasonable time, and that his failure to do so during three years was a breach of the contract, notwithstanding the fact that the third party had not enforced his claim against the plaintiff. The measure of damages payable in consequence of such breach would be the amount of the debt which defendant had undertaken to discharge. DORASINGA TEVAR v. ARUNACHALAM CHETTI . I. L. 163. — Action of trespass—Damage to property by alteration of neighbouring house—Injunction.—Plaintiff and defendants, occupants of neighbouring houses, were joint tenants of the party-wall. Defendants unroofed their house, raised the wall, and placed beams on it to rebuild their house. The lower Appellate Court found that, in consequence of this alteration, the rain from defendants' houses descended upon plaintiff's verandah and caused damage to plaintiff, and decreed that defendants should restore the wall to its former height, and remove the beams placed on it. Held, on special appeal, that taking the finding to be that the alteration created "stillicidium," where it did not exist before, or that it rendered more burdensome an existent "servitus stillicidii," it would be very dangerous to hold that every trifling excess in the exercise of a servitude should justify the pulling down of the building creating the excess; that in the present case the damages should be assessed and awarded, and the injunction to remove the roof of the house and reduce the wall be made conditional upon the defendants not removing the cause of the nuisance. In such a case, the measure of damages is the amount which will induce the defendants to abate the nuisance. AKILAN-DANMAL v. VENKATA CHALA MUDALI

164. — Trespass to immovable property—Quarrying stone without leave.—Where the defendants without leave quarried on the land of the plaintiff and removed a large quantity of stone therefrom, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover by way of damages the value of the stone after it was quarried, and that the defendants were not entitled to a deduction therefrom of the cost they had incurred in quarrying the stone. DALJIRA ANANDRAY v. BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY . . . 6 Bom., A. C., 235

165. — Infringement of trade mark—Damage caused to plaintiffs by way of enhancement of loss, and not by loss of profit.—Where the infringement of the plaintiffs' trade mark by the defendants caused a loss of profit to the plaintiffs, not by diminishing the amount of goods sold by the plaintiffs, by taking away their customers or ousting them from their usual market, but by causing the goods actually sold by the plaintiffs to be sold at a diminished price,—Held that the defendants were liable for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs; and that the amount of the reduction in the price of the goods sold was the measure of damages. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for the infringement of a trade mark used by the plaintiffs upon bundles of yarn sold by them, and known as "No. 20 red tie" yarn. They alleged that the defendants introduced into the Madras market a quantity of yarn bearing similar marks to those upon the plaintiffs' yarn, but of very inferior quality; and that, in consequence of this act on of the defendants, the selling price of the plaintiffs' yarn was, during the months of April and May 1885, depreciated beyond the amount of depreciation attributable to the natural fall of market prices in those months; and they contended that such depreciation was the natural and reasonable result of the defendants' wrongful act. The plaintiffs calculated the damages sustained by them at Rs. 6,000. It appeared that during the months in question the plaintiffs' mill was not working at a profit, and would have made no profits even if the plaintiffs had obtained for their yarn the ruling market price. The damage, therefore (if any), caused to the plaintiffs by the action of the defendants was not in form of profits, but in the form of enhancement of loss. Held, upon the evidence, that the extra fall in the price of the plaintiffs' yarn beyond the general market depression was due, not simply to the introduction of the defendants' yarn into the Madras market, but to its introduction with the trade mark similar to that of the plaintiffs. The Court found that the said wrongful act of the defendants prejudicially affected the sale of the plaintiffs' yarn to the extent of about two annas per bundle; that the damage thus sustained by the plaintiffs was the reasonable and probable result of the defendants' action; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover such damage from the defendants. MANOCKJI PETIT MANUFACTURING COMPANY v. 166. — Wrongful execution of decree—Execution of decree after sale of decree.—The defendant, being the holder of a decree, whereby a certain sum was declared due as a lien on two mouzabs therein mentioned, sold his decree to the plaintiff in the present suit, who had purchased the proprietary right in the mouzabs subject to the lien. Subsequently the defendant, who retained possession of the decree, sued out execution and realized the amount due under it, together with subsequent interest thereon. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover back the money paid by him as the consideration for the sale, together with damages proportionate to the loss sustained by reason of the subsequent improper execution of the decree, viz., the amount of subsequent interest. GOUD SAHAJ v. HUB SAHAJ . . . 3 Agra, 202

167. — Wrongful attachment—Death of cattle seized.—In execution of a decree against his judgment-debtor, the defendant caused the cattle of the plaintiff, a stranger, to be seized and taken. The plaintiff filed his claim under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, which was allowed. Subsequently to the admission of the claim, but before the order for release of the cattle, three of the bullocks died. The plaintiff sued for damages consequent on the seizure of the cattle, and for the value of the three bullocks

which had died during the time they were in the custody of the officer of the Court. Held that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for damages sustained by him in consequence of the seizure and detention of the cattle,—i.e., for a sum sufficient to cover what would have been plaintiff's expenses for hiring bullocks to cultivate his land. SUNJAN BISH v. 168. ——— Liability of execution-creditor in damages for wrongful seizure—Attachment of stranger's property.—Certain unthreshed rice belonging to the plaintiff was wrongfully attached by the defendants under a money-decree obtained by them against a third party. The attachment had been made under a warrant which specified the rice in question, and which had been issued upon a dakhast presented by the defendants, in which they prayed for the attachment of this particular rice as their judgment-debtor's property. The rice, while in the custody of a bailiff of the Court nazir in the place where it had been attached, was clandestinely threshed and carried off by thieves, who left the straw. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the value of the unthreshed rice from the defendants,—Held the measure of damages should be the value of the rice as it stood at the time of the wrongful attachment made at the instance of the defendants. If, however, the plaintiff accepted the straw left by the thieves, the value of the straw as it stood at the time of such acceptance should be deducted from the value of the straw and rice when unsevered from each other. GOMA MAHAD PATIL GOKALDAS KHEMJI I. L. R., 8 Bom., 74

169. ——— Loss of timber on attached estate.—This suit was brought to cancel a decision of the Magistracy (A), dated 11th December 1869, whereby first defendant was put in possession of the Choladi forest, to establish plaintiff's jeum right thereon, and to recover the same with $14,000, value of timber. The facts, as they appeared, were that there was a coffee estate called Choladi, carved out of the same jungle as that in which the Choladi forest was, but not adjoining it in a different talukh. The cultivation of that estate was begun in 1863 by G, who in 1865 transferred his interest to B, who in 1867 was succeeded by first defendant. In the following year the first defendant proceeded to lay claim to the land in dispute, and in 1868 he prosecuted some hill-men for trespass and had their crops attached. In June 1869 he procured an order from the Deputy Magistrate whereby the Gudalur Sub-Magistrate was ordered to attach certain lands (no boundaries being specified). The land and timber thereon were accordingly attached and an order of attachment served on plaintiff. The case then came before the Assistant Magistrate, who, after holding an enquiry as to possession, passed the order (A), cancellation whereof was prayed in the plaint. The District Judge found that down to the interference of the Magistrate in 1868 plaintiff was in possession as owner, and he further decreed that defendant should pay plaintiff $14,000 on account of the timber which had been carried off, by whom it did not appear. On appeal, the High Court confirmed the decision of the District Judge on the question of title, but reversed it as to the value of the timber carried off, because there was no causal connection between its loss and a wrongful act of the defendant which was needed to justify the award of that sum as damages. There was no evidence of the mode of the loss. The occasion for it was given by an order of a Magistrate, and the mere preferring of the complaint which gave birth to that order did not render the defendant responsible in the circumstances of the case. IRVINE v. 171. ——— Interest on value of goods.—In a suit for damages for detention of property, interest at the bazar rate on the value of the goods awarded and recovered may not be an adequate measure of damages. 172. ——— Suit for damages for taking and detaining coffee estate and properties and for destruction of crop—Profits of estate.—The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant to recover damages for the wrongful taking and detention by the defendant of a coffee estate and certain moveable property belonging to the plaintiff, and for the loss sustained, partly by the destruction of the growing "supplemental crop" and partly by neglect of the proper cultivation of the estate. The possession of the estate had been in the first instance given in right of the defendant's claim as mortgagee, and afterwards retained mistakenly in the same right. The Civil Judge awarded the plaintiff $20,000 as compensation for the injury, privation, and suffering resulting to the plaintiff from the defendant's wrongful acts in obtaining and withholding possession of the estate. Held that the defendant should not have been adjudged to pay more than the value of the profits of the estate, and of any property removed from the estate, and compensation for any injury caused to the estate by the acts or neglect of the defendant or his agents. MELVON v. 174. ——— Suit for trespass—Expenses of criminal proceedings—Loss of income.—The plaintiffs, describing themselves as the agent and gomastah of the hereditary durmakurtah of the Trivellore Pagoda, brought a suit for damages against the defendant, the committee of the district, appointed by virtue of Act XX of 1863, and their servants, for a trespass by the defendants in forcibly dispossessing them of the pagoda and the property therein, and for the wrongful removal and retention of the property. The plaintiff stated that the defendants were punished criminally for the trespass by the Magistrate, who, after enquiry under ss. 318 and 319 of the Criminal Procedure Code, restored the possession of the pagoda to the plaintiffs. The damages claimed were the value of jewels, cash, records, and accounts not restored; the expense incurred by the durmakurtah in the purification of the pagoda; the amount of counsel's and vakil's fees in the criminal proceedings; and the amount of income received by the defendants during their possession during a festival held at the pagoda. Held that the plaintiff was brought by the plaintiff personally, and not on behalf of the plaintiffs by the durmakurtah through his recognized agents; that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a moderate amount of damages for the wrong done to them in ejecting them from the pagoda; that the expenses incurred in the criminal proceedings instituted by the plaintiffs were not recoverable as damages, such damages not being directly traceable to the wrong and its natural and necessary consequences; that the amount of income received by the defendants during the festival was a loss sustained by the durmakurtah and not by the plaintiff personally; and that the plaintiff had failed to make out the loss of property alleged. VENKATASA NAIKER v. SRIHIVASSA CHARYAR

[4 Mad., 410]

175. ——— Invasion of right of private ferry—Damages for trespass to lands.—In a suit to maintain the old boundaries of a ferry, the plaintiffs did not assert that they enjoyed a right of private ferry which had been invaded by an order of the Magistrate extending the boundaries of a public ferry, but only that they had theretofore, without charging toll, transported, in their own boats, or in boats hired by them, their labourers and cultivators and implements of husbandry; and that, in the exercise of this right, the order of the Magistrate was injurious to them.

Held that such damage was much too remote to entitle them to relief. Held also that the damage done to the plaintiffs by passengers and carriers trespassing on their lands on their way to the ferry was too remote to entitle them to maintain the suit. RAM GOVIND SINGH v. MAGISTRATE OF GHAZIPORE

178. ——— Charter-party—Unseaworthiness of ship—Expenses of renewing bills—Delay—Loss by exchange.—The plaintiffs chartered a ship of the defendant, and by the charter-party it was stipulated that the said ship, being tight, staunch, and strong, should receive from the plaintiffs a full cargo of rice or grain, and being so loaded should therewith proceed to St. Denis, the freight to be paid there on right delivery of cargo. The penalty for non-performance of the charter-party was to be the estimated amount of freight. The plaintiffs began to load on May 3rd, and continued doing so until June 10th, having then shipped very nearly the full cargo; they then stopped loading in consequence of a notice from the defendant that the ship was leaking. In consequence of the leakage, the cargo had to be shifted, and a portion of it found to be damaged had to be replaced after the leak was stopped. The charges of shifting the cargo and the cost of the cargo substituted were paid by the defendant. Considerable delay occurred in consequence of the leak, and the loading was not completed until the end of July. On May 28th, when the plaintiffs had loaded a portion of the cargo and had obtained bills of lading, they drew a bill of exchange at sixty days for the value of the cargo covered by the bills of lading on their agent at St. Denis, which they sold to the Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, hypothecating the cargo for the amount of their draft. Other similar drafts were subsequently drawn and sold. When the plaintiffs received notice of the leakage, they, in anticipation of the delay which would occur in consequence, arranged with the Comptoir d'Escompte that the bills should not be forwarded forthwith, but should be held by the Comptoir d'Escompte, and renewed by the plaintiffs on the completion of the loading, the plaintiffs paying interest on the bills in the meantime at 9 per cent. per annum. On renewing the bills, the plaintiffs, in consequence of the difference in the rate of exchange, were out of pocket Rs400. In an action against the owner for breach of the charter-party in not supplying a ship tight, staunch, and strong, as stipulated, the plaintiffs sought to recover, as damages arising out of such breach of the charter-party, the interest paid by them on the drafts in pursuance of their arrangement with the Comptoir d'Escompte, the sum they had to pay on renewing the bills, a further sum for interest on bills they could not negotiate in consequence of not being able to obtain bills of lading from the defendant, and the value of the stamps on the bills, which had been cancelled in pursuance of the plaintiffs' arrangement with the Comptoir d'Escompte. Held that such damages were too remote. ROBERT AND CHARBLOP v. 179. ———— Breach of covenant in not giving lessee possession.—Expenses of litigation for possession.—In a lease for a period of nine years, without payment of salami, entered into between A and B, A bound himself by the following covenant: "In the event of B not being put in possession of the leased premises, A will have to make good anything in the shape of khisara or sukan (loss) to which B may be put in consequence." On A failing to put B in possession of the premises mentioned in the lease, B brought a suit against the party in possession, but failed to recover possession. In a suit by B against A for recovery of damages for breach of contract, measuring the amount of damages at the expenses he had to incur in the suit for possession, and also the whole of the profits which he expected to derive from the lease.—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover only nominal damages. MAHOMED ISA KHAN v. 180. ———— Suit for damages against lessor, including costs.—Costs of litigation—Cause of action.—In 1883, A, the trustee of a certain charity, executed in favour of X and Y an agricultural lease for nine years and delivered over possession of the lands comprised in it, being part of the trust property. The lease contained a provision that it should be cancelled on default being made in payment of the rent and kist, and it contained no express covenant for quiet enjoyment. In 1887 default was made in payment of the rent and kist. A thereupon cancelled the lease, and sued X and Y, and obtained a decree for the arrears. In a suit by X for damages for breach of contract against A, the plaintiff alleged that certain raiyats setting up a false claim had evicted X from the lands demised at the instigation of A, who had subsequently sought unsuccessfully to obtain further advantages for himself. Held that the plaint disclosed a good cause of action against the

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.*See CASES UNDER EXECUTION OF DECREE.See CASES UNDER SALE IN EXECUTION OF DECREE—DISTRIBUTION OF SALE PROCEEDS.1. — Gift by judgment-debtor.—

If a judgment-debtor has sufficient other property to satisfy a decree against him, it cannot be said that, in point of law, every gift of any part of his property is void on the ground that the whole was hypothecated for the payment of the decree. KRIPANATH SURMA v. NBITOKALEN DABBE . . . 12 W. R., 137

2. — Voluntary gift by husband to wife.—A voluntary gift by a husband to his wife is not void against the husband's creditors if at the time of the gift the husband was solvent, and the wife was put in possession under the gift, especially if the plaintiff became a creditor of the husband long after the gift. ENANT ALI v. RAMPRASAD KOOHWAR . . . 1 W. R., 21

3. — Conveyance by husband to wife in fraud of creditors—Voluntary deed.

—If a man largely indebted executes a conveyance of property to his wife, as in satisfaction of dower, the conveyance is void as against his creditors, if executed for the fraudulent purpose of keeping the property in his own hands out of the reach of the creditors. So also a conveyance by a man in such circumstances to his wife is fraudulent and void if no dower is due, and the conveyance is voluntary, and not made in satisfaction of any debt due to him. MAHOMED BUSAKEROOLLAH CHOWDHRY v. ABEMOONISSA . . . 7 W. R., 513

4. — Voluntary transfer—Bona fide gift—Gift not to defraud creditors.

—A voluntary transfer of property by way of gift if made bona fide, and not with the intention of defrauding creditors, is valid as against creditors. The Hindu and English law on the subject discussed. GAUFURHAI v. SRINIVASA PILLAI . . . 4 Mad., 84

5. — Transfer of property by judgment-debtor.

a judgment-creditor, may maintain a suit to set aside the alienation, notwithstanding that the transfer was made before he sued for his debt, or that the debt was unsecured. SUGUN KOONWAR v. PIRMOO LALL

(2 Agra, Pt. II, 211)

8. — Assignment in fraud of creditors—Possession of property sold remaining in vendor.—Where a person purchases for one who is in failing circumstances and has decrees against him in execution, and allows the vendor (being his relative) to remain in possession of the goods sold, as well as the profits thereof, he may perhaps purchase in good faith; but the Courts are not justified in declaring the validity of such a transfer without there being the clearest proof that the purchaser has bought, and paid the consideration, and some sufficient explanation of the apparently suspicious circumstances attending the purchase. KALYAN v. DOULATA . . . 1 Agra, 70

9. — Deed, Execution of, by judgment-debtor—Deed executed in fraud of creditors.

—Where a mortgagor executes a deed of sale for the purpose of defrauding and defeating his creditors, it is void against any of the creditors who may obtain a decree against him, although the deed may have been executed before execution was taken out on the decree. RADHA MOHUN DUTT v. BISWASSUN BUNDOPADHAYA . . . 6 W. R., 90

10. — Deed executed by judgment-

debtor—Assignment to defeat creditors—Consideration—Validity of transaction for valuable consideration defeating execution.—Plaintiffs sued for certain lands under an agreement executed to their elder brother, S, by defendants in the following terms: "You have this day received a loan of Rs. 345-4-4 from D and from me, B, for the purpose of remitting to the Court, in satisfaction of the warrant amount, in the matter of the suit No. 26 of 1835 on the file of the Provincial Court between your father, the late U, appellant, and M, respondent. You have, owing to the encumbrances consequent on a few more suits against you, caused all the property which you own in Vegayammappetta to be attached for the said (warrant) amount, and caused six puttis of land, houses, back-yards, and certain moveable property out of the same, to be knocked down in auction in our names and some other personal property in the names of others; and have therefore proposed to us to execute a kararnama (to you) engaging (ourselves) to carry and pay the above-mentioned (Rs. 345-4-4) into the Court; to obtain receipts for the amount and certificates in our names for the real property; to allow the tiled house, back-yard having fruit trees and moveable property, to be held by you as hitherto; V and myself, B, to enjoy the produce of the six puttis of land for twenty years from Saruari to Sit-tadhri, on account of the said loan and interest thereon; and to restore the land, together with the certificates (to be) issued by the Court in our names. We have accordingly agreed to your proposal," etc. The Principal Sudder Ameen considered that the agreement was invalid on the ground that it appeared to have been executed with a view to defraud creditors of S. Held on appeal that the real nature of the transaction was that S. borrowed money from defendants to enable him to buy in his own land; that defendants purchased only for and on behalf of S., taking from him an assignment of part of the property for twenty years, in order to repay themselves the money lent; that there was, therefore, abundant consideration for the defendants' promise to give up possession at the end of twenty years. Held also, following the English law, that where there is a real transaction between the parties for valuable consideration, whether it be by way of sale or mortgage, the transaction is valid even as against a creditor, though the object may have been to defeat an expected execution. SANKARAPPA v. KAMAYYA [3 Mad., 231]

11. — Assignment of property by debtor—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5.—An assignment made bona fide and for valuable consideration, before execution put in, and without notice of claim of execution-creditor, held not to be void under the Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5. TARRUCKWATH PAULIT v. 14. — Fraudulent assignment—Action of trespass—Want of possession—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5.—In an action of trespass against the Sheriff, it appearing that the plaintiff had never had possession of the property alleged to be converted, and that the conveyance to the plaintiff of the property seized had been effected with the view of defrauding the creditors of an insolvent, who shortly before such conveyance was the owner of the same,—Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The doctrine of a fraudulent conveyance being void as against creditors held to be a principle of Hindu as it is of English law. SHAM KISSORE SHAW v. COWIE . . . 2 Ind. Jur., O. S., 7

15. — Fraudulent assignment—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5—Hibba—Equity and good conscience.—Whether or not the Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5 (which may or may not extend to or operate in the "mofussil"), is more than declaratory of the common law, so far as it avoids transactions intended to defraud creditors, its principles, and those of the common law for avoiding fraudulent conveyances, have received effect in the Indian Courts, and have properly guided the decisions of the Courts in administering law according to justice, equity, and good conscience. good consideration, and by it creditors being delayed in their just rights, the maker having intended to protect his property thereby from those who at the time were his creditors.—Held that the hibba was void according to equity and good conscience. ABDUL HYE v. MAHOMED MOKAYYAR HOSSAIN

Fraudulent preference—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5—Transfer of property by insolvent in consideration of debt barred by limitation—Fraud—Conveyance in trust for payment of creditors—Hindu widow, Duty of, to pay husband's creditors equally—Purchaser from Hindu widow—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16, 17.—The English Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5, has not, as such, any operation in the mofussil of India, but it embodies principles of general application on account of their essential equity. An unequal disposition of property by a person in insolvent circumstances, and known to be so by the donee, will be set aside if impeached by creditors, except where the transferee has simply pressed a valid claim or made a purchase in good faith. The plaintiff G. obtained a decree against M. on the 30th September 1878. M. died in April 1879, leaving A., a childless widow, him surviving. At his death, M. was in insolvent circumstances. On the 7th June 1879, A. conveyed by a deed of sale (exhibit 96) the whole of his property, consisting of a house and a garden, to the defendants, who were his separated brothers, in consideration of two time-barred debts due to them by her deceased husband. At the same time, she executed in their favour a rent-note (exhibit 99) by which she agreed to pay them a nominal rent for her occupation of the house; but no rent was ever claimed or paid. On the same day the defendants passed an agreement, in writing (exhibit No. 114), to the widow, by which they undertook to settle the claims of the principal creditors of M.: but they never acted upon this agreement, nor did they communicate it to any of the creditors, and they admitted in their evidence that it did not form any part of the consideration for the sale-deed (exhibit 96). In 1881 the plaintiff G., in execution of his decree against M., attached the house conveyed by the sale-deed. The attachment was raised at the instance of the defendants, who claimed the house under the sale-deed (exhibit 96). Thereupon the plaintiff G. brought the present suit to establish his right to attach and sell the house as the property of his judgment-debtor, M., in execution of his decree. The defendants relied upon the deed of sale executed by the widow (exhibit 96). Held that the alleged sale to the defendants (exhibit 96) was not a real transaction supported by good consideration, and must be set aside in so far as it interfered with the execution of the plaintiff's decree. The transferees were not purchasers for money, or even creditors diligent in pressing an enforceable right. They were members of the vendor's family, and the consideration they gave consisted of old and barred claims that could not be enforced. Payment of such debts by a transfer of the insolvent's whole estate, to the disappointment of creditors whose claims were not barred, was in itself a fraud. Being made to near relatives acquainted with the facts, it would not be regarded as a real and practical transaction. Held also that the character of the transaction was not altered by the agreement (exhibit 114) of the defendants to settle the claims of M's creditors. That agreement was not communicated to the creditors, and it could be suppressed at any moment by the concurrence of the parties to it. If that agreement was independent of the conveyance (exhibit 98) of the property to the defendants, the latter had no consideration to support it, except merely the moral consideration to pay a barred debt, which could not prevail against the obligation to satisfy a decree about to be executed. If, on the other hand, the agreement (exhibit 114) was connected with the conveyance (exhibit 98), the exclusion of its terms from that document and the secrecy observed about it stamped the transaction with fraud, whether the transfer was real or only fraudulent. There was no honest trust for distribution which could defeat the plaintiff's execution. M might have preferred one creditor to another having an equal right, and the fact that the creditor was his brother did not make such a preference improper. But although M might have preferred one creditor to another, his widow could not do so. She took her husband's estate as an aggregate, assets and debts together. She was in some degree a trustee and at any rate under a legal obligation to pay her deceased husband's debts, and to pay them as far as she could equally. She was not at liberty to deal capriciously with the estate, which she could alienate at all only for special purposes indicated by the law. She ought not, in performing the duty cast upon her, to prefer one valid claim to another, as her husband might have done. This advantage a creditor might have obtained from her husband by his diligence, but on her no pressure could be exercised except through the estate which she was bound, pressure or no pressure, to distribute among the creditors. A purchaser from a Hindu widow must see that she exercised her power of sale strictly, or at least satisfy himself that a sufficient cause for alienation exists. If the defendants told the widow that the claims, in consideration of which she made the conveyance to them, were barred by limitation, then clearly she had joined with them in a scheme for depriving the judgment-creditors of their due. If they did not tell her, they deceived her by their silence when, as near relatives getting an advantage, they were bound, in dealing with an ignorant woman, to put her in possession of all the material facts. Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16 and 17. BANGILSHAI KALYANDAS v. VINAYAK VINAYU

17. — Fraudulent conveyance—Gift in fraud of creditors—Subsequent sale by creditors in execution of subject-matter of gift—Purchase at execution-sale for inadequate price by means of fraud.—In June 1876, A, being in pecuniary difficulties, executed a deed of gift of all his property in favour of his wife and minor sons, the plaintiffs. B, one of his then existing creditors, subsequently obtained a decree against him, and in execution sold part of the said property. At the sale, the first defendant, by means of false representation, became the purchaser at an inadequate price. In July 1879, A applied to have the sale set aside, on the ground of the fraud of the first defendant, but his application was rejected. In 1881 the plaintiffs by their next friend sued to set aside the sale, contending that at the date of B's decree the property was theirs by virtue of the deed of gift of June 1876, and further that the sale was void by reason of the defendant's fraud. Held, rejecting the plaintiffs' claim, that the plaintiffs could not be allowed to set up their deed of gift as against the proceedings in execution under which the defendant acquired his title as purchaser. That gift was made to them by A when he was in pecuniary difficulties, and included all A's property. It was, therefore, void as against his then existing creditors of whom B was one. B was, therefore, entitled to sell the property in execution of his decree. HONNUSIE C. COWASJI

[I. L. R., 13 Bom., 397]

18. — Sale to creditor for old debt and new advance on debtor's bankruptcy—Intent to delay and defeat creditors—Bona fides of purchaser—Fraudulent preference—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5.—On the 27th February 1886, the firm of Ranchhod Jamna, a family firm, was on the point of failing, being heavily indebted. On that day, the managing member of the firm executed four sale-deeds, comprising all the property of the firm, in favour of four different creditors of the firm, of whom the plaintiff was one. The deed executed in favour of the plaintiff was in consideration of a then existing long-standing debt and a fresh advance of Rs. 400 made by him to the firm. The next day the firm stopped payment. The defendant was one of the creditors of the firm, and sought to attach and sell the property conveyed to the plaintiff in execution of a decree which the defendant had obtained against the firm. The plaintiff's objection to the attachment by the defendant having been disallowed, he brought the present suit against the defendant, to establish his right to the property attached under his sale-deed. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the sale to the plaintiff, having been effected in order to delay and defeat the creditors and to give undue preference to the plaintiff, was void. Held on the evidence that the sale to the plaintiff was, on the part of the plaintiff at least, a bona fide sale in consideration of a debt still due, and for payment of which the plaintiff had been pressing, and Rs. 400 in cash; and that there were no circumstances in the case which showed that the plaintiff in entering into it was a party to any scheme to delay the general body of the creditors. That being the case, the sale was not impeachable at the instance of the defendant; although, having regard to the fact of its having been negotiated on the eve of the failure of the firm, it might possibly be regarded as a sale by which the plaintiff obtained an unfair preference, and as such perhaps be impeachable at the suit of the whole body of creditors. In re Johnson; Gordon v. Gillingam, L. R., 20 Ch. D., 389, referred to and followed. MOTILAL RAVICHAND v. UTAM JAGJIVANDAS

19. — Arrangement between firm and its creditors—Giving time Mortgage security.—A firm in difficulty executed a mortgage securing debts due to creditors named in the deed, it being understood that all the creditors should refrain from suing the firm until the expiration of a certain period. Notwithstanding this, two creditors named in the deed immediately sued for their debts and obtained decrees. Other creditors named in the deed afterwards bringing the present suit to enforce their rights under the mortgage, it appeared that the intention and agreement was that the deed should not take effect, unless all the creditors came in and were bound by it. Held that the suits above mentioned having been brought before the expiration of the period agreed upon, the consideration for the mortgage had failed, and the creditors could not sue the firm on the mortgage-deed. ASUDHIA PRASAD v. THE FIRM ON THE MORTGAGE-DEED. I L R. 8 All. 830 SIDE OPAL

21. — Debtor giving priority to one creditor before attachment.—A debtor may, prior to attachment, give priority to one creditor over another, notwithstanding judgment may have been obtained against him. DOOGA TEWARI v. NAIPAL ANSARI 2 N. W. 294

22. — Assignment to one creditor in preference to others—Bankruptcy laws.—It is not illegal for a debtor to execute a security or make an assignment in favour of one creditor over others. The provisions of the bankruptcy laws, made to promote the equal distribution of the trader's assets among all his creditors, are not in force in these provinces. BULDOO DAS v. NOORNA LALL [I N. W. 23: Ed. 1878, 21]

23. — Deposit with creditor by debtor when in insolvent circumstances to protect his property—Sale in execution under decree by creditor—Purchaser, Right of.—A member of a firm of native bankers which had become insolvent, with a view to protect his property from the general body of his creditors, in March 1870, deposited property to the value of Rs 20,000 with the appellants, another firm of bankers, to whom he owed Rs 1,600. In April 1871, the appellants brought an action against him for Rs 500, the balance of that debt, and obtained a decree, in execution of which the property was put up for sale and purchased by the respondent. Held by the Privy Council (affirming the decision of the High Court of the North-Western Provinces) that the respondent was entitled to the property. DWARKA DAS v. RAI SITA RAM 5 C. L. R. 430

24. — Equitable assignment prior to attachment of debt—Assignee for sales without notice.—A creditor, who attaches a debt due to his judgment-debtor, is not in the same position as an assignee for value of such debt without notice of a prior assignment, but in respect to prior assignments stands in no better position than his judgment-debtor. An assignment prior to attachment that is good against the judgment-debtor is also, as a general rule, good against his attaching creditor. Notice to the holder of funds is not necessary to complete, as against the assignor, an equitable assignment of such funds. In August 1870, E J signed and gave to F S & Co. a letter addressed to E L & Co., by which he requested them to pay over to F S & Co. any surplus proceeds of his consignment of one hundred bales per Acoros, after recovery from the underwriters of the amount due under a policy of insurance (which had been effected on the hundred bales), after making certain deductions. This letter was given to F S & Co. in consideration of a pre-existing debt. On the 8th of August 1870, F S & Co. sent the letter to E L & Co. with a request that they should act upon it. The surplus proceeds of the insurance of the one hundred bales reached E L & Co. on the 26th of June 1871, and were attached in their hands by a judgment-creditor of R J before they were paid over to F S & Co. Held that R J had validly assigned the surplus proceeds of the hundred bales to F S & Co., and that such assignment was valid as against subsequent attaching creditors. Semhle—That an attachment upon such surplus proceeds, before they reached the hands of E L & Co. from the underwriters, would have been invalid. MAHJI HANURAJ v. RAMJI JOTTA [3 Bom. C. C. 130]

25. — Assignment made with intention of defeating creditors.—D executed a razinama in favour of plaintiff on the 20th August 1868, transferring certain lands to the latter. Plaintiff, after passing the usual kabuliat to the Collector, was put in possession of the lands in question. On the 7th April 1869, T obtained a money-decree against D, and on the 2nd July 1869 attached the lands as belonging to D. Held that, if the razinama were a real transaction made for a valuable consideration, although entered into with the intention of defeating the execution of the money-decree, the title of plaintiff under that razinama would prevail. A sale or mortgage, if real, though made for the purpose of defeating an intended or probable execution, is valid against the execution-creditor. But if it be only a colourable transaction, not intended to confer upon the vendee or mortgagee any beneficial interest in the property, but simply to substitute such vendee or mortgagee as a nominal owner in lieu of the real owner (the judgment-debtor), with the object of saving the property from execution, the vendee or mortgagee is a mere trustee, and the judgment-creditor is entitled to attach and sell the property. TILAKCHAND HINDUNAL v. JITMAL SUDHARAM [10 Bom. 206]

26. — Fraudulent transfer—Burden of proof—Mahomedan law—Sale of immovable property by Mahomedan in satisfaction of wife's dower—Consideration—Deferred debt.—A genuine sale made for good and valid consideration to one creditor, even if effected to delay and defeat another, apart from cases in which either insolvency or bankruptcy is involved, is not void. If a man owes another a real debt, and in satisfaction thereof sells to his creditor an equivalent portion of his property, transferring it to the vendee, and thereby extinguishing the debt, the transaction cannot be assailed, though the effect of it is to give the selected creditor a preference. Wood v. Dixie, 7 Q. B., 892, Chowne v. Baylis, 31 L. J. Ch., 757, and the authorities collected in the notes to Twynn's case, 1 Smith's L. C., 19, referred to. Pending a suit for recovery of a debt, the defendant, who was a Mahomedan, executed a deed of sale, dated in June 1882, of a four-annas zamindari share in favour of his wife, the consideration recited therein being the amount of the vendee's deferred dower-debt. Subsequently the creditor obtained a simple money-decree against the defendant, and in execution thereof attached the four-annas share. The vendee objected to the attachment on the basis of her sale-deed, but her objection was disallowed on the ground that the instrument was collusive. She thereupon brought a suit against the judgment-creditor for a declaration of her right, and to set aside the attachment order. Held that, if there was in fact a subsisting debt due for dower from the husband to the wife, and he transferred and she accepted the four-annas share in satisfaction of it, the transaction was a perfectly legitimate one, and no Court had any power to disturb it. It was for the defendant, the judgment-creditor, to establish either that the deferred dower-debt did not constitute such a present consideration as would support the sale, or that the transaction was merely colourable and a fictitious one, which was never intended to have operation or effect, either as a transfer of the property or an extinguishment of the dower-debt; and that, despite what appeared in the sale-deed, the parties remained in precisely the same position as before it was executed,—the four-annas still remaining the property of the vendor, and as such liable to the attachment. Held, applying the general principles of the Mahomedan law as to deferred debts, that there was good consideration for the sale of June 1882, and that, in the absence of proof of fraud of the kind above indicated, the vendee was entitled to maintain it, and to succeed in the suit. *SURA BEH v. 27. — Assignment in fraud of creditors—Deed of trust—Voluntary conveyance.—A by a deed of trust charged real estate to secure, among other things, a debt alleged to be due by him to his grandfather's estate on account of sums received by him from a debtor to that estate. A at that time was in a state of indebtedness which occasioned his afterwards becoming an insolvent. Such deed in the circumstances held, so far as related to A's alleged debt, fraudulent and void as against his creditors. TABERNY CHURN BONNERJEE v. MATT-LAND . . . 11 Moore's L. A., 317

28. — Assignment to trustees for benefit of creditors—Power of insolvent debtor—Insolvency—Retirement of trustees.—P, a trader in insolvent circumstances, on the 1st December 1866, executed two deeds conveying his moveable and immoveable property to trustees to hold on certain trusts in favour of such of his creditors as should assent to the said deeds within three calendar months. The deeds contained powers directing the trustees, after dividing the trust-moneys rateably among the assenting creditors, to pay "the residue, if any, after answering the several purposes aforesaid and also the debts or dividends upon the debts of all such creditors as shall decline to come in and execute or assent" to the said P; powers authorising them to return to the debtor or permit him to retain such part of his household furniture, linen, and china as they might think fit; and powers authorising them to carry on the debtor's business and employ him therein and in winding up his affairs. Held in the lower Court (TUNNEN, J.) that an insolvent debtor in the mofussil may assign all his property to trustees for the benefit of the creditors who may assent to the conditions of the assignment; and such an assignment will be valid, although it may operate to defeat an expected execution, if it be the intention of the assignor to confer on the assenting creditors a substantial interest in the property assigned, and not merely to defeat or hinder a judgment-creditor. Such an assignment may be made to trustees, but it is not requisite that it should be made to trustees; and it is not requisite that it should be made directly to the assenting creditors. It will confer on the trustees a title to the property assigned superior to that of a judgment-creditor, who has obtained an order for attachment subsequently to the assignment. It is not invalid if made subject to a condition requiring assenting creditors to execute a release of the debtor, nor is it invalid if it declares a resulting trust in favour of the debtor; but semble—that the Court might order such resulting trust to be executed for the benefit of judgment-creditors who decline to assent to the assignment. Nor is it invalid if it empowers the trustees to permit the debtor to retain such portion of his furniture, linen, etc., as they may think fit; but this power should be exercised only when the other assets are insufficient to discharge the primary objects of the trust. Nor is it invalid if it contain a power for the trustees to continue the business, if the power so given is ancillary to winding up the business and realizing the assets of the estate; nor is it invalid if executed only by a minority of the creditors. Nor can it be invalidated by subsequent negligence on the part of trustees. The question as to the intention of the debtor in executing such an assignment is a question of fact rather than of law; and in determining this question the conditions and trust subject to which the assignment is made may be considered. Held on appeal (per ROBERTS and FRANKSON, JJ., MORROW, C.J., dissenting) that the deeds were good deeds. A trader in the mofussil in failing circumstances may, in the absence of any statutory provision and of a bankrupt law, make a valid assignment of his property, before liens have attached upon it, or afterwards subject to such liens, to trustees simply for the purpose of having it distributed fairly among all his creditors, although it may defeat particular decree-holders and deprive them of their execution. Semble—Such a trust does not become inoperative by reason of the retirement of two out of three trustees and of the inability

29. ———— Trust-deed to liquidate debts—Non-communication of trust-deed to creditors—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10.—D S executed a trust-deed, whereby he made over his property to trustees to manage his affairs and liquidate his debts in manner therein directed. The deed contained this provision: "In order to prepare a list of my debts, the trustees shall ascertain the same by looking into my books of accounts; and they shall not admit any debt without rukur, hath-chitta, or bundi bearing the signature of myself or my monib gomastas, or without decree. Held, in the absence of evidence that this deed was communicated to the creditors, that it did not create a trust in favour of the creditors, but cured only for the benefit of the executant; that therefore the plaintiff, a creditor, was not entitled to rank as a beneficiary under it; and that it did not create a trust in favour so as to take out of the operation of the Limitation Act a claim that otherwise fell within it. FINK v. MOHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH . . . I. L. R., 25 Cal., 642 (2 C. W. N., 469)

30. ———— Creditors' trust deed—Assignment of all his property by debtor to trustees for payment of creditors—Right of suit by creditor who had signed as creditor and trustee to recover his debt notwithstanding the deed.—On the 20th March 1894, the plaintiff sued the defendant, who traded under the name of F J, to recover Rs 7,705 due on an adjusted account. On the 17th April following, the suit was on the board for hearing, but by consent of parties was adjourned for three months. Later on the same day, the defendant executed a deed, whereby he assigned all his property to the plaintiff and three other persons as trustees in trust for the payment of his creditors. The deed was executed by the plaintiff and the other trustees both as trustees and as creditors. It contained no release and no agreement by the creditors to take less than the full amount of their debts. It conveyed all the defendant's property to the trustees, who were to collect the estate and divide it rateably among the creditors "without prejudice to the rights of the several creditors to recover" the balance (if any) which might remain due to them after receiving such rateable distribution, and it declared that the said agreement for the payment of the debts was accepted by the creditors, and that, "upon payment to the said creditors, respectively, of the full or whole amount of their respective claims, these presents shall operate as fully and effectually as an order of discharge from the Insolvent Court in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor, or the said firm of F J to the said creditors, respectively, and may be pleaded in bar to any claim in respect of such debts; and each of them, the said creditors, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, doth hereby covenant with the said debtor, his heirs, executors, and administrators, that he or they will not, if the said debtor shall pay the said full amount of the debts due by him or his said firm of F J to the said creditors, bring any action, suit, or proceeding against them or any of them for or in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor or the said firm of F J to the said creditors respectively." On the execution of this deed, the trustees took possession of defendant's books of accounts, and proceeded to recover the defendant's estate. The three months for which, as above mentioned, the suit was adjourned in April 1894, having now expired, it came on for hearing. The defendant pleaded the deed, and contended that the plaintiff, having accepted the trust and signed the deed, was not entitled to continue the suit against him. Held that it would be inequitable that the defendant, having handed over all his property to four of his creditors as trustees with a view to the payment of his debts in full, should be harassed by one of those creditors who had accepted the trust. The conduct of the plaintiff had been such as to deprive him of the right to present payment of his debt except by the assignment made to him and the other trustees. There had been a concluded agreement, which precluded him from proceeding with his suit, and to allow him to proceed would be a fraud on the creditors. Under the circumstances, there was an implied condition that the creditors should not sue until their remedy under the assignment was exhausted. The creditors should get what they could under the assignment, and then proceed for the rest. GOKULDAS MUCCANJI v. VASANJI JAIBAK . . . I. L. R., 19 Bom., 12

31. ———— Composition-deed between debtors and creditors—Managing member of a firm appointed as trustee—Right of suit after dissolution of the firm.—Certain traders having been adjudicated bankrupts in the Court of Mauritius, the creditors agreed to a composition-deed, which was sanctioned by the Court, whereby the present plaintiff, therein described as the managing member of the firm of S & Co., was appointed trustee, and his firm guaranteed the payment of a dividend of 50 per cent. The firm was subsequently dissolved, and its assets were assigned to a third party. The plaintiff now sued to recover costs decreed to him in his capacity as trustee in various suits in Mauritius, and it was objected that he was precluded from suing by the dissolution of his firm and the assignment away of its assets. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit. Subbaraya v. 32. ———— Bond given after personal discharge in respect of debt incurred before insolvency—Private settlement with creditor without notice to official assignee and creditors—Agreement by creditor not to oppose final discharge—Admissibility of evidence—Untrue recital in bond.—An agreement, by which an insolvent who has obtained his personal, but not his final, discharge, without notice to the official assignee or his other creditors, settles the claim of one creditor, and by which that creditor agrees not to oppose his final discharge, is void as in fraud of creditors and as inconsistent with the policy of the Insolvent Debtor's Act. In a suit on a bond containing such an agreement, evidence is admissible on behalf of the obligor to prove that a recital in it that all the other creditors have been settled with, was untrue. Though no creditor is bound to oppose the final discharge of an insolvent, yet a private agreement by a creditor with the insolvent, by which, in consideration of a money payment, the creditor binds himself not to oppose, is void as opposed to the policy of the Insolvent Debtor's Act and as in fraud of creditors. NAORUJI NUSSEERWANJI THEONTHI v. 33. — Order giving mesne profits not awarded by decree—Bond, Construction of—Condition in a bond unfulfilled—Admission of debt—Abandonment of non-existent claim on compromise.—An order assumed to be made by a Court in execution, that decree-holders should have mesne profits which they had not been awarded in their decree, was without jurisdiction, and could not be regarded as taking effect. This order was afterwards reversed as having been made without jurisdiction, but was standing when the bond in suit was executed by the decree-holders, now defendants, admitting money to be due to the plaintiff, and, as to a particular sum, promising payment out of the mesne profits when realized by them. The decree-holders, afterwards compromising with their judgment-debtor, abandoned the claim to mesne profits. This, however, was no real concession, because the right to mesne profits had no existence. Although the unqualified admission of a debt implies a promise to pay it, yet this implication does not necessarily follow where there is an express promise to pay in a particular manner, and on a certain event happening. Held, on the construction of the bond, that here the admission was referable to the particular obligation agreed to be discharged only in the manner stipulated; and that therefore the payment was to be contingent on there being mesne profits. Held also that it had not been established that the non-occurrence of the condition had been occasioned by the conduct or default of the defendants, and that, therefore, the objection to pay the sum in question never took effect or became enforceable. KALKA SINGH v. It appeared that there was no fraud on the part of the mortgagors, and that the mortgagee who received payment was not the agent of the plaintiff in that behalf. Held that the mortgage had been discharged, and the plaintiff was not entitled to sue. Wallace v. from them jointly. In 1881 the plaintiff sold, inter alia, the hypothecated property to defendants Nos. 2 to 4, and it was arranged that the secured debt should be paid off by the vendors. They failed to do this, but in 1882 they executed a mortgage for the amount due in favour of the other of the two partners, and he thereupon gave a written discharge to the plaintiff, who was found to have been acting in collusion with him to the disadvantage of his partner, the holder of the hypothecation-bond. The latter brought a suit in 1885 upon the hypothecation-bond and obtained a personal decree against the present plaintiff, which was ex-parte, the amount of the decree being declared to be charged on the land in the possession of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. Meanwhile, defendant No. 1, who was the assignee of the mortgage of 1882, had obtained a decree upon it against defendant No. 4. This decree not having been executed, he subsequently sued upon the mortgage again and obtained a decree against defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The plaintiff now sued to have the last-mentioned decree set aside and recover the balance of the purchase-money from defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The Court of first instance passed a decree for the amount claimed, and declared it to be charged on the land. Defendant No. 1 preferred an appeal, in which defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were joined by the Court of first appeal, which dismissed the suit. Held that plaintiff, having allowed a decree to be passed against him ex-parte in the suit of the holder of the hypothecation-bond, and having obtained a collusive discharge from the other partner, was not entitled to recover against the defendants. KANAGAPPA v. 36. — Deed of settlement—Attachment of settled property by creditors of settlor—Summons to remove attachment—Order dismissing summons, Effect of—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 260-283—Sale of settled property in execution against settlor—Purchaser, Right of—Right to set aside deed—Suit by creditors to set aside deed on ground of fraud—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 95.—On the 7th April 1877, one N executed a trust-deed, whereby certain immoveable property belonging to him was conveyed to trustees in trust for himself for life or until he became insolvent or attempted to alienate, assign, or encumber the same, and then for his wife and children. At the date of the deed, N was largely indebted, and two or three months prior to the date of the deed he had deposited the bulk of his moveable property with a friend, who endeavoured to compromise with his (N's) creditors, and who applied the said property in paying off a portion of his debts. About a fortnight after the trust-deed was executed, N filed a suit against one H and others. That suit was dismissed, and N was ordered to pay H's costs. In execution of that decree for costs, H, in July 1882, attached a house which was part of the property settled by the trust-deed of April 1877. Thereupon the trustees of the deed claimed to have the attachment removed, alleging that he was in possession as trustee. He took out a summons for that purpose, which was dismissed on the 19th December 1882, without prejudice to the rights of the parties to file a suit in respect of the subject-matter thereof. No suit, however, was filed by any of the parties, and the house was sold in execution. H, the execution-creditor, bought it at the sale, and was put into possession, which he retained until his death in December 1888. After his death, his executors took possession. They desired to sell it, but were unable to do so, in consequence of the claim put forward by N's wife and children (defendants Nos. 1, 3, and 4) under the trust-deed of 1877. They accordingly filed this suit against N's wife and children (defendants Nos. 1, 3, and 4) and the surviving trustee of the trust (defendant No. 2), praying for a declaration that the defendants had no right or interest, present or future or contingent, in the said property; that they (the plaintiffs), as executors of H, were absolutely entitled to it, and that the trust-deed was fraudulent and void against the plaintiffs and other creditors of N. It was contended that the suit was barred under art. 95 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, having been filed more than three years after 1882, at which date the fraud was alleged by H himself and relied on by him in the attachment proceedings. Held that the suit did not fall within art. 95, and was not barred. The substantial prayer of the plaint was a declaration that the plaintiffs were absolute owners of the property in suit, and the basis on which that prayer was rested was the sale to H in 1883. The "relief" asked for was the declaration of the plaintiffs' absolute title: the "ground" of the relief was the acquisition of that title by virtue of the certificate of sale, coupled with a denial of it by the defendants. Such a case did not come within the purview of art. 95. It was further contended that the effect of the order in December 1882, dismissing the summons which had been taken out by the trustees to having the attachment removed, was to declare the trust settlement invalid, and that, as no steps had been taken by the trustee against whom that order was made to establish the validity of the trust within a year from the date of that order, the defendants could not now rely on their rights as cestis que trust under that deed. It was argued that the Judge, in dismissing the summons, must have intended to pronounce the whole settlement invalid, having regard to s. 280 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), because otherwise he ought, according to that section, to have ordered, in express terms, the removal of the attachment from the reversionary estate of wife and children. Held that the portion of s. 280 relied on only applies where the property is in the possession of the judgment-debtor "partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person." Here the property was at the time of the attachment, and had been for some months previously, in the sole possession of the trustee, and neither wholly nor partly in the possession of the judgment-debtor. The conditions under which the latter part of s. 280 becomes applicable were not present in the present case, and the Judge, in dealing with the summons, was not, therefore, called on to make any declaration as to the precise limits of the interest in the property upon which he held the attachment to be maintainable. Held that there was no such order passed against the interests represented by the first, third, and fourth defendants as to come under the terms of s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held, on the evidence, that the deed of settlement was fraudulent and void as against creditors. It was proved that at or before the date of the settlement N was largely indebted. Nearly the whole of his moveable property had been deposited with a friend, in order that the creditors might be compromised with and a portion of his debts paid off, and under those circumstances he made a settlement of this immovable property, which was all that could really be said to have then belonged to him on the eve of the litigation which was about to commence. But held also, dismissing the suit, that the plaintiffs were only entitled to an estate for the life of N. They were the representatives of H, and his claim, upon which this suit was founded, arose by virtue of his having purchased the right, title, and interest of N, the settlor, and the right so purchased did not include the right to set aside his own deed. Held also that the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed, inasmuch as this suit was not filed by them on behalf of, and for benefit of, all the creditors of N. Seemle—A claim to set aside a deed of settlement as fraudulent and void as against creditors can only be made by creditors whose claims are not barred by limitation. Quere—Whether the existence of creditors who were creditors at the date of the deed of settlement is necessary. BURJORJI DORABJI PATEL v. 37. Account—Burden of proof—Presumption—Principal and agent—Restriction of principal's liability to debts proved to be just.—Fraud and undue influence having been found, with the result that a decree cancelled transfers executed in favour of a creditor by a talukhdar whose manager had received in his name money forming the consideration for the transfers, an account was directed to be taken of the sums actually due and payable by the principal. Directions were given for the payment, not of all the money received from the creditor by the manager, but only of sums (a) shown to have been lent by the creditor to the principal himself personally, and of those (b) received by the manager on behalf of the principal in the course of a prudent management. The burden of proof lay on the creditor of showing that any particular advances fell within the class (b); and where the advance, having been received by the manager, had been partly used in payment of Government revenue due on the estate managed by him,—Held that the Court below had rightly presumed that the rents should have covered the revenue due; and this presumption having to be met, it was for the creditor to bring proof to overcome it. PARTAB BHADUR SINGH v. DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—continued.

—A debtor and the firm of which he was a member were adjudicated bankrupts in Mauritius, and a receiver was appointed by the Court. Subsequently the creditors met and resolved that, if the adjudication was annulled, a composition, payable by instalments, be accepted in full satisfaction of their debts, and that the security of the plaintiff's firm be accepted for payment of such composition, and that the bankrupts' estate be assigned to that firm, and that the plaintiff be appointed trustee to carry out such arrangement. An instrument was executed to give effect to these resolutions, and was concurred in by the receiver and approved by the Court, which annulled the adjudication, and ordered that the bankrupts' estate in Mauritius and India vest in the plaintiff, who was appointed trustee to carry out the said composition with full powers of realization. The plaintiff now sued to recover the moveable and immoveable property of the bankrupts in India. Held (1) that the above instrument was valid as a composition-deed, and did not require to be stamped and registered as a conveyance; and that any surplus that might remain after payment to the creditors did not belong to the plaintiff's firm, but was subject to a trust for the bankrupts; (2) that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount expended by him in payment of the creditors, together with such costs as were incurred by him in recovering debts due to the estate and could not be recovered from the debtors, and the costs of certain sales and a mortgage incurred in realization of the estate; (3) that plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession of the immoveable property until the sum due was paid to him by the defendants or was satisfied out of the rents and profits of the property. No order made by the Court at Mauritius can operate to transfer the ownership of immoveable property in British India. So held, without deciding that the Court cannot compel the bankrupt when within its jurisdiction to execute in favour of the trustee such a deed as will, in accordance with the formalities of the local law, render the order of the Court effectual. SUBBARAYA v. pay all K's debts. The deed stated that it was A's desire that the estate should remain in his family. After K's death, the plaintiff sued for an account and for redemption of some of K's land which had been originally mortgaged by K to the defendant. It was contended in defence that the deed created a trust for the payment of K's debts, and that the defendant was entitled to tack on to the mortgage debt a simple contract debt which K owed to him. It was found that the defendant was the only unpaid creditor, and that the property was more than sufficient to pay the debt. Held that the deed did not create a trust for K's creditors, the object, on the contrary, being the preservation of the family property. Held, further, that due effect could not be given to the whole of the instrument, unless construed as a conveyance to the plaintiff, charged as between himself and K with the payment of K's debts. Held also that during K's life his creditors could not claim to be paid under this instrument, in the absence of any communication between them and the plaintiff, capable of being construed as an admission by him that he held the property as trustee for them, although they might possibly impeach it. On K's death, however, his creditors would be entitled in an administration suit to have the charge of his debts enforced in their favour. RAGHO GOVIND v. BALYANT AMRIT

Held that, on the death of one of the co-contractors, the whole liability to the plaintiff attached to the surviving co-contractors. CHETU NARAYANA PILLAY v. AYANPERUMAL AMBALOM . . . 4 Mad., 447

50. ———— Substitution of liability.—The defendant being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of Rs74-4-0, the amount of the plaintiff's bill against the ship Campa, of which the defendant was master, they both went to the office of the ship's dubash in Bombay, where the defendant signed the bill as correct, and ordered the dubash to pay the amount. The dubash gave the plaintiff Rs500 in cash, saying he would pay the balance next day. The plaintiff said he would prefer a receipt for his bill, and returned the Rs500. An acknowledgment was then given to him, by which the dubash promised to pay the bill for Rs74-5-0 immediately on the money being received from Mr. S. On the day following the plaintiff took out a summons in the Small Cause Court against the defendant, whom he arrested, on making an affidavit that he was about to leave Bombay; and the Court held that "there was no valid substitution of the liability of any person or fund in place of the original liability of the defendant," and gave judgment for the plaintiff for Rs74-5-0 and costs, which judgment, as to the principal sum, was affirmed by the High Court, but costs on the sum of Rs500, originally paid to and returned by the plaintiff, were disallowed. ALLABAKIA ALI v. GRACH . . . 3 Bom., O. C., 150

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—concluded.

51. ———— Arbitration—Award not signed by all the creditors—Suit by signing creditor for his debt—Act IX of 1872, s. 65.—K, on the one part, and his creditors, including C, on the other part, agreed in writing to refer to arbitration the differences between them regarding the payment of his debts by K. The award compounded K's debts and assigned his property to his creditors, and directed that K should dispose of such property for their benefit, and that, if he misappropriated any of the property, he should be personally liable for the loss sustained by the creditors on account of such misappropriation. C signed the award amongst other creditors, but the award was not signed by all the creditors. C received a dividend under the award. Held in a suit by C against K to recover a debt which had been compounded under the award, in which suit C alleged that several creditors had not signed the award; that some of them had sued K and recovered debts in spite of the award; that K had misappropriated some of the property; and that, if the plaintiff did not sue, there would be no assets left to satisfy his debt, and that such suit was not maintainable. LEHTA MAL v. CHUNI LAL

[I. L. R., 2 All., 173]

52. ———— Agreement by creditors to give time—Failure of consideration—Mortgage to creditors as security for payment of debts—Construction of instrument—Suit by creditor before expiration of time—Separate suits by creditors.—A certain firm gave its creditors jointly, and not severally, a mortgage on certain immoveable property as security for the payment of the debts due to them by the firm, the consideration for such mortgage being a promise by all the creditors not to sue the firm for their debts for a certain time. Before the expiration of such time, several of the creditors sued for their debts. Subsequently several of the creditors brought separate suits against the firm to enforce the mortgage in respect of their debts. Held that the consideration for the contract of mortgage, viz., the forbearance of all the creditors not to sue for their debts for a fixed time, having failed, the firm was discharged from liability on the mortgage. Held also that, had the contract of mortgage remained in force, it would not have been competent for individual creditors to come into Court and enforce the contract in respect of their separate debts. SIDH GOPAL v. AJUDHIA PRASAD I L. R., 5 All., 392

53. ———— Sale to defeat execution of decree—Creditor without specific lien.—A creditor without a specific lien (e.g., a mortgage or other direct charge or incumbrance) has not any a priori right to debar his debtor from parting with his immoveable property until it is attached in due course of law. RAJAN HARJI v. DECLARATORY DECREE, SUIT FOR

1. ——— Existence of relief which can be granted—Civil Procedure Code, s. 15.—No declaration of right can be made in a suit under s. 15, Act VIII of 1859, unless the plaintiff can show that there is some relief which the Court can give. BALI

DEBIA 12 W. R., 248

2. ——— Existence of right to consequential relief—Declaration of right for relief in other suit.—A declaratory decree ought not to be made unless there is shown to be a right to some consequential relief which, if asked for, might have been given by the Court, or unless a declaration of right

ZAIBUNNISSA v. ELAMER BEGUM 19 W. R., 268

3. ——— Hostility of defendant—Suit for declaration of title.—Held by JACKSON, J., that in a suit for declaration of title defendants must have given a cause of action by impugning it antecedently to plaint filed, even though their written statement be hostile. COLVIN COWIE v. ELIAS

[2 B. L. R., A. C., 212; 11 W. R., 40]

4. ——— A party is not entitled to ask for a declaration of right except as against a defendant in some degree hostile to him in respect of that right. PROMOTHO NATH GHOSH v.
JODOO NATH SEN . . . 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 298

5. ——— Suits for declarations of abstract rights—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 15.
—S. 15 of Act VIII of 1859 refers to declarations which are binding relatively to the parties before the Court, not to declarations of abstract right or bare

[Bourke, O. C., 8; Cor., 94]

6. ——— Right to consequential relief —Question relating to third persons not parties to suit.—The question proposed for adjudication in the suit, in which a declaratory decree was sought, being in effect one not between the plaintiff and the defendant, but between the plaintiff and third persons not parties to the suit, the suit was dismissed in reference to the ruling of the Privy Council in Vijia Ragunadab Bani Kolandapuri Natchiar v. Dora-singa Taver, 15 B. L. R., 83, dated the 10th of February 1875, that a declaratory decree is not to be made, unless there is a right to consequential relief which, although not asked for, might, if asked for, have been given. RAM BEAROSE LAL v. GOPI BISI

[7 N. W., 300]

7. ——— Hostile act entitling plaintiff to substantial remedy.—A hostile act which would justify a declaration of right under Act VIII of 1859, s. 15, must be such an act as would entitle the plaintiff to some substantial remedy in the way of injunction or otherwise. RAM KHELAWAN SINGH v. OUDH KOOR . . . 21 W. R., 101

8. ——— Intricate questions of law—Principles on which Court grants relief.—The Court will not, in a declaratory suit, decide intricate questions of law, where no immediate effect, and possibly no future effect, can be given to its decision, and when the postponement of the decision to a time when there may be before the Court some person entitled to immediate relief will not prejudice a plaintiff's right in any way. HUNSAUTTI KERANI v. ISHMI DUTT KORI . . .

9. ——— Demand entailing delay and expense—Further enquiry.—Since a declaratory decree is a matter of discretion, a claim for a declaration ought not to be remanded by an Appellate Court for further enquiry which is likely to entail delay and expense, where the plaintiff's claim is contingent on his surviving the defendant, and where the declaration will not be binding on parties with possibly preferential titles who have not been joined in the suit. DOORGA PRASHAD SINGH v. DOORGA KOORWARI . . . I. L. R., 4 Cal., 190; 3 C. L. R., 51

10. ——— Suit before Specific Relief Act, 1877.—A declaratory suit instituted before the Specific Relief Act came into force must, in regard to the right to a declaration, be governed by the law as laid down by the Privy Council in Dorasinga Taver's case, 15 B. L. R., 88. PURASARA BHATTAR v. RANGA BHATTAR . . . I. L. R., 2 Mad., 208

11. ——— Consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—Per Cur.—The restrictions imposed under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act must be held to refer to the consequential relief properly obtainable by the plaintiff as against the defendants in the suit, and not to be extended to the case of all third parties who may possibly support some of the contentions of the defendants. SUBRAMANYAN v. PARAMASWARAN . . .

[I. L. R., 11 Mad., 116]

12. ——— Suit to declare alienation by Hindu widow invalid—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Amendment of plaint.—Death of widow pending appeal by plaintiff.—Right of appellant to proceed with appeal.—Plaint not to be amended by claim for possession.—The proviso to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, that "no Court shall pass a declaratory decree where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so," refers to the position of plaintiff at the date of suit. Where a suit was brought for a declaration that certain alienations of land made by a Hindu widow to the defendants were not binding on plaintiff, her reversionary heir, and, pending appeal by the plaintiff, the widow died.—Held (1) that the plaintiff was entitled to proceed with his appeal; (2) that plaintiff could not be permitted to amend his plaint and claim possession. GOVINDA v. PRUMDEVI . . . [I. L. R., 12 Mad., 136]

2. SUITS CONCERNING DOCUMENTS.

13. ——— Hostile document affecting title—Right to sue to have it declared invalid.—When a person in possession finds that a document has been set up and registered which affects his title, and which every day's delay is likely to render him less able to disprove, he is justified in coming before the Court and asking that such a deed may be declared inoperative. NUFISA BANOO v. MAHOMED SUFDAR . . . 24 W. R., 326

14. ——— Suit to set aside mortgage—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 15.—Injury not admitting specific relief.—Act VIII of 1859, s. 15, did not give power to the Court to give a declaratory decree, unless the position of the parties is one of hostility to one another. The plaintiff must come into Court with some definite complaint against the defendant, which is such as admits of specific relief being afforded by the Court with regard to it. He cannot, irrespective of all behaviour on the part of the person whom he makes defendant, bring that person into Court merely for the purpose of getting the Court to clear up difficulties, whether of fact or law, which may have arisen between himself and the defendant. He must generally allege and rely upon some cause of action against the defendant, except in that class of cases in which the Court gives its aid towards the fulfilment of trusts, and this principle is not affected by s. 15 of Act VIII of 1859. Therefore where a plaintiff bought, at a sale in execution of a decree, the right, title, and interest of one defendant, a judgment-debtor, in a ship, and by his plaint sought to discover the bona fides of certain transactions by way of mortgage between the judgment-debtor and the other defendants, and asked a declaration that he, as purchaser, was entitled to the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor; or in case it should appear that, at the time of the attachment in execution, the ship was the property of the judgment-debtor, subject to any valid lien or charge in the hands of the other defendants or either of them affecting the same, then that the amount of such lien or charge might be ascertained, and the plaintiff as such purchaser might be declared entitled to redeem the same. Held that the plaint was bad upon the face of it. But as it appeared, taking the plaint and evidence together, that there was some substantial dispute between the parties relative to the defendant's mortgage, the Court, to prevent further litigation, construed the plaint as having asked that the alleged mortgage might be set aside. LALLAN BHUGWAN DASS v. AKBAR . . . 1 Ind. Jur., N. B., 890

15. ——— Suit to set aside, Effect of recital in bond—Nature of consideration.—A declaratory decree will not be given to show that a bond was not executed as recited in the bond, for money borrowed by the widow for the performance of the husband's shraddh, such recital being no evidence against the heirs of the husband in a suit to charge the estate. SUNKER LALL v. JEDOOBHAI SHAYB

[9 W. R., 285]

16. — Suit by son to have deeds by father declared void—Unauthorized alienation.—A son may sue to obtain a declaration that sales by his father, without his consent, are, as against him, void and inoperative to pass or to affect any rights possessed by him in the property, and also that property still in his father's hands is ancestral, and cannot be alienated, except under circumstances recognized by the Mitakshara law as justifying alienation, and with the consent of those whose consent is by that law requisite. KANTH NARAIN SINGH v. PREM LALL PAURBY . . . 3 W. R., 102

17. — Suit to declare deed is valid—Failure to prove case—Form of decree.—When a plaintiff sues to declare that a deed is valid, and to confirm his possession under it, and fails to show sufficient cause for the Court's interference under s. 15, Act VIII of 1859, the Court ought simply to declare to that effect, and not to determine that the plaintiff has no right, and that the deed is void. PHOOLCHUNDER LALL v. SHEORAM KOOHWAR
[9 W. R., 104]

18. — Suit to declare deed forged—Untrue documents.—In a suit to obtain a declaration that two pottahs and a chitta which had been put forward in a butwarra were forgeries, it was held that, as no action had been taken on the documents in question, and plaintiff's rights were in no way prejudiced, the Court could not make any binding declaration of right. SHRO LALL CHOWDHURY v. CHUNDER BHENDE OOPADHYA . . . 9 W. R., 586

19. — Cause of action—Registered deed.—A suit will lie to set aside a registered deed on the mere allegation that it is a forgery. PAKIE CHAND v. THAKUR SINGH

20. — Lease set up by intermeddler in rent suit.—The defendant had unsuccessfully intervened in a suit between landlord and tenant, setting up a lease as middleman. Held that the landlord was entitled to sue in the Civil Court to have such lease declared fictitious. RAGHUNATH CHOWDHURY v. BRAIKDHARI SINGH
[3 B. L. R., Ap., 48; 11 W. R., 455]

21. — Cause of action—Guardian, Suit by, for minor.—In a suit for a declaratory decree that certain pottahs put forward by the defendants in a suit for enhancement were forged, and calculated to injure the interests of a minor, whom the plaintiff as guardian represented, Held there was no cause of action. OOMAR SALMA BIRI v. LAKHI PRYA DEBI
[7 B. L. R., 617 note; 10 W. R., 47]

—continued.

22. — Suit to have will set aside—Consequential relief—Obstruction to title—Nuncupative will.—A right to come to the Court to have a document or act which obstructs the title or enjoyment of property cancelled or set aside, or for an injunction against such obstruction, would be sufficient to sustain a declaratory decree. Seemle—Where a defendant sets up a nuncupative will as entitling him to property in respect of which the plaintiff asks for a declaration of his right, a right to have such will declared null and void arises in cases where property legally passes by a will of that nature, since a claim under such a will is not a bare assertion of title, but the setting up of a specific act by which title to property may be conferred. SHRO SINGH RAI v. DAKHO
3 C. L. R., 193; L. R., 5 I. A., 87]

23. — Suit to set aside lease—Consequential relief—Act VIII of 1859, s. 15—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.—A granted a lease of his entire property to the plaintiff for a term of years, with power to enhance the rents and make settlements. Immediately after, A executed a pottah in favour of B, covering a portion of the same estate, whereby B's rent was to remain unchanged for a period continuous with the plaintiff's lease. In a suit by the plaintiff against B and A's representative to have the pottah set aside, it was objected that, inasmuch as the deed had not been as yet set up against the plaintiff, nor any injury shown to have been occasioned to him thereby, he had no cause of action. Held that the suit was maintainable. In laying down the rule that "a declaratory decree cannot be made, unless there be a right to consequential relief," the Privy Council did not intend to deny to the Courts of this country the power to grant decrees in any case in which, independently of the provisions of Act VIII of 1859, s. 15, they had the power to grant a decree. This power is generally the same as that of the Court of Chancery in England. RAM NERDHAN KOONDOL v. RUGHOO NATH NARAIN MULLO . . . I. L. R., 1 Cal., 456; 25 W. R., 516

24. — Cause of action—Suit to cancel pottah.—Plaintiff sued in a Civil Court to cancel a pottah which he alleged was incorrect and fraudulently attested by the defendant with a view to prevent plaintiff from taking steps to cancel it in a Revenue Court: a copy of the pottah had been affixed to plaintiff's house. Held that the plaintiff had no cause of action cognizable by a Civil Court. NURDIN v. ALAYUDIN
[I. L. R., 12 Mad., 134]

25. — Suit to declare registered document forged—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—Under s. 84 of Act XX of 1866, the District Judge ordered, without taking evidence, the registration of a document which had been opposed on the ground that the execution of it had been obtained fraudulently and by putting the executant under duress. The executant brought a civil suit against the party in favour of whom the document had been drawn, for a declaration that the document was not genuine, and was invalid and inoperative. Held that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to try the genuineness of a registered document, that the registration of a document, the execution of which was obtained by improper means, affecting the property of the executant, is a good cause of action on which to ask for a declaratory decree. PRASANNA KUMAR SANDYAL v. MATHURANATH BANERJI

—continued.

26. — Suit to contest the genuineness and validity of a registered document—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 74, 75—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39.—Under the special procedure provided in the Registration Act (III of 1877), the defendant, in whose favour a document was said to have been executed, succeeded in obtaining an order from the District Registrar for the registration of the same, although the plaintiff, who was alleged to have executed it, appeared before the Sub-Registrar, and subsequently before the Registrar, and denied executing it, and alleged it to be forgery. In a suit brought under the above circumstances to have the document declared void and to have it cancelled,—Held that the proceedings of the Registrar, when he enquired whether the document had been duly executed or not, were in no sense those of a "competent Court," but only those of an executive officer invested with quasi-judicial functions, and that, consequently, such a suit was maintainable. Held also that the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) applied, s. 39 evidently contemplating and providing for such a suit. Ram Chandra Pal v. Becharam Dey, 8 B. L. R., Ap., 28 : 10 W. R., 329, disented from. Prasanna Kumar Sandyal v. Mathuranath Banerji, 8 B. L. R., Ap., 26, followed. MOHINA CHUNDER DHUR v. JUGUL KISHORE BHUTTACHARJI [I. L. R., 7 Cal., 736 : 9 C. L. R., 471

27. — Suit to cancel a void or voidable instrument—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39—Reasonable apprehension of serious injury.—Any person against whom a written instrument is void or voidable, who has reasonable apprehension that such instrument, if left outstanding, may cause him serious injury, may sue to have it cancelled. The test is "reasonable apprehension of serious injury." Whether that exists or not, depends upon the circumstances of each case. It cannot be laid down, as a rule of law, that in no case can a man, who has parted with the property in respect of which a void or voidable instrument exists, sue to have such instrument cancelled. Iyyappa v. Ramalakshamma, I. L. R., 18 Mad., 549, referred to. KOTRABASSAPPAYA v. CHENNAIRAPPAYA . . . I. L. R., 23 Bom., 375

28. — Suit to set aside fraudulent deeds—Absence of any attempt to disturb possession.—In a suit for declaration of right of possession to certain lands and to set aside alleged fraudulent pottahs, which the plaintiff alleged had been executed by the defendant with a view to put an obstacle in the way of his attaining his right, but it was not shown that they had made any actual attempt to disturb the right of occupancy which it was found the plaintiff had,—Held that the plaint did not disclose a sufficient cause of action to enable the Court to make a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiff. UDAI CHANDRA MANDAL v. AHMEDULLA

S. C. WOODCOCK CHUNDER MUNDUL v. AHMEDULLA . . . 12 W. R., 487

29. — No use of deed to plaintiff's injury.—Where a petition was presented by A under s. 84, Act X of 1866, for registration of a deed, and the deed was duly registered, a plaint filed against A in which the plaintiff simply complained that A had executed the deed fraudulently, and obtained registration of it, was held to show no cause of action, no act of A having been shown to use the deed to the plaintiff's injury. RAM CHANDRA PAL v. BECHARAM DEY

30. — Suit for declaration that document is forged—Apprehension of injury.—Cancellation of document.—Where a void or a voidable document cannot legally be used for the purpose which is apprehended, there is no such reasonable apprehension that such document, if left outstanding, will cause injury as will entitle the person claiming the cancellation of such document to relief. SUNIL LAL v. HIRA LAL . . . I. L. R., 1 All., 622

31. — Suit in Civil Court to enforce exchange of pottah and muchalka—Madras Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865)—Civil Procedure Code, s. 53—Amendment of plaint.—A suit in the Court of a District Munsif to enforce acceptance of a pottah and execution of a muchalka by defendant in respect of a holding in a village to which plaintiff claimed title was dismissed as not being maintainable. Held that the suit should not have been dismissed, but the plaint should have been amended by the addition of a prayer for a declaration of the plaintiff's title; and that the Court then would have had jurisdiction to grant, by way of consequential relief, the relief originally sought. NARASIMMA v. SUNDARARAYANA . . . I. L. R., 12 Mad., 481

32. — Consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—Plaintiff, being in possession of certain land as an incumbrancer under a registered instrument, agreed orally with the mortgagor in 1885 to purchase it. The mortgagor subsequently sold the land to others, who took the conveyance, which was registered with notice of the plaintiff's mortgage and of the oral agreement with him. Plaintiff now sued for a declaration that the conveyance was not binding on him and for a specific performance of the oral agreement. Held that the suit was not bad for want of a prayer for delivery up, and cancellation of, the conveyance. KANNAN v. KRISHNAN . . . I. L. R., 13 Mad., 324

—concluded.

33. — Suit for cancellation of document and for possession—Withdrawing portion of claim—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Plaintiffs, members of a Malabar tarwad, sued (1) for the cancellation of a deed of gift of certain immoveable property alleged to belong to their tarwad; (2) for restoration of the property, the subject of gift, either to plaintiff No. 1 or defendant No. 1 the present karnavan, on behalf of the tarwad. The Munsif dismissed plaintiff's suit on the merits. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge allowed plaintiffs, who were unable to pay the Court-fees for recovery of the property, to withdraw that portion of the claim, and decreed for plaintiff as to the remaining portion, viz., for cancellation of the document. On second appeal it was held, reversing the decree below, that, the prayer for restoration of the property being in the circumstances of the case maintainable, it was not competent to plaintiffs to restrict themselves to the other kind of relief sought, and that the maintenance of the suit in its maimed form would be an evasion of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. BIKUTTI v. KALENDAR [I. L. R., 14 Mad., 267]

34. — Consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Suit by a member of a tarwad for a decree declaratory of the invalidity of a kanom granted to other members by the karnavan of the tarwad—Attornment of tenants—Possession, Transfer of.—Where a kanom of tarwad property is granted by the karnavan to members of the tarwad, and the property in question remains in the possession of the karnavan on behalf of the tarwad, all that is necessary for a junior member to do in order to prevent the possession becoming adverse to the tarwad is to obtain a declaration that the kanom which is relied on as the cause of adverse possession is invalid. But if the kanom is granted to a stranger to the family, who is in possession, possession must then be sought for as relief consequent on the declaration. An attornment of tenants to the kanomdars does not operate as a transfer of possession from the tarwad to the kanomdars. Subramanyam v. Paramaswaran, I. L. R., 11 Mad., 116, followed, and Bikutti v. Kalendar, I. L. R., 14 Mad., 267, Abdulkadar v. Mahomed, I. L. R., 15 Mad., 15, and Narayana v. Shankunni, I. L. 35. — Suit to set aside deeds giving and receiving in adoption—Cause of action.—A declaratory decree cannot be made, unless the plaintiff would be entitled to consequential relief if he asked for it. It is discretionary with a Court to grant a declaratory decree, and the Courts in India ought to be most careful in exercising such discretion. A widow of a Hindu, sued B as father and guardian of C to have it declared that the deeds executed by A and B, one of giving C in

36. — Suit to have adoption declared void—Declaratory decree not obtainable by absolute right—Discretion of Court.—It is discretionary with a Court to grant or to refuse a declaratory decree with regard to the circumstances—Seenarain Mitter v. Kishen Soondery Dassee, 11 B. L. R., 171; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 149, referred to and followed. A talukhdar died leaving a widow; also a son, who, having succeeded as talukhdar, died childless. This son's widow, being in possession, sued for a declaration that an adoption by the father's widow, to the father, was void and ineffectual. The ground of suit was that, at some time or other after the death of the plaintiff, the person alleging himself to have been adopted might obtain the talukhdari, unless his adoption should now be negatived. With regard to all the circumstances, the refusal of such a declaration was approved by their Lordships. If the person alleged to have been adopted should sue hereafter, the question would be decided whether he was validly adopted or not. PITHI PAL KUNWAR v. GUMAN KUNWAR I. L. R., 17 Cal., 933 [L. 37. — Suit by reversioner to have forged letter giving power to adopt set aside and to restrain adoption—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Under Act VIII of 1859, s. 15, a suit will not lie at the instance of the reversionary heir for a declaration that a certain letter purporting to have been written by the husband of the defendant empowering his widow to adopt a son is a forgery, and to have the same cancelled; and for an injunction restraining the adoption of a child under the letter. *Raj Coomary Dassee v. 39. — Suit to set aside adoption—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 15—Right to declaratory decree.—In a suit brought, on the ground of an existing right of inheritance, for immediate possession and mesne profits, by setting aside an adoption, the Court will not allow the form of action to be changed, and proceed to decide whether (the claim for possession on the ground of an existing right being abandoned) a declaratory order may not issue for setting aside the adoption, but will, on failure of right to immediate possession, dismiss the suit. According to s. 15, Act VIII of 1859, declaratory orders can be issued only in suits brought to obtain such orders. RAJESWAR KOOHAR v. LUDHIAN KOOHAR . . . 6 W. R., 1

BHASINATHAI 6 Bom., A. C., 70

41. — Suit to have adoption set aside—Oner of proof.—A stranger, having no interest in the matter, has no right, even with the consent of presumptive reversionary heirs, to sue for an order declaring an adoption to be valid. A plaintiff suing for a declaration that an adoption is invalid is bound to prove the invalidity. BRISO KISHORE DASS v. SREENATH BOSS [9 W. R., 468

42. — Suit to have adoption declared invalid—Adoption by widow 35 years after death of her husband.—The plaintiff was a son of a mother of the deceased husband of the first defendant. The first defendant adopted a son 35 years after the death of her husband, in pursuance, as she alleged, of an authority to adopt given by her husband. The suit was brought by the plaintiff to have the adoption declared invalid upon the ground that the adoption was made without the husband's authority. Some time after B's death, P, a son, was born to E on 16th September 1848. Some time before P's birth, a portion of B's watan lands had been made over to K by the revenue authorities. The remaining portion of B's watan lands was placed by Government under sequestration, which was not removed until 1865. for P as B's son. On 15th February 1849, the revenue authorities on enquiry held that P was not the son of B, and decided that K was entitled to retain the watan lands of B. On 16th March 1872, K adopted a son B A. In a suit brought by P on 4th December 1872 for a declaration that P was the son of B, and for setting aside the adoption of B A by K,—Held that, under the circumstances, a suit for a declaratory decree would lie; for the plaintiff, even if his claim to the property were barred as against K, would yet be entitled to obtain an injunction against any intervention of B A in performing the wadh or other ceremonies for the benefit of B or assuming the status of B's adopted son, and, moreover, the Legislature has, in Act VII of 1870 and Act IX of 1871, recognized the right of a person to bring a suit to set aside an adoption as a substantive proceeding, independent of any claim to property. KALOWA KOM BHUJANGRAY v. 45. — Suit against tenant for life alleging waste—Consequential relief—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 15.—The words of s. 15, Act VIII of 1859, must be construed upon the principles and by the light of the decisions of the English Courts of equity upon the 60th section of 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, which is in similar terms. The effect of these decisions, taken in conjunction with the decisions of the Privy Council, in construing the provisions of the Indian Act, is that a declaratory decree is not to be made unless there is a right on the part of the plaintiff to consequential relief, which, although not asked for, might, if asked for, have been given, or unless the declaration of right may be made the foundation of relief to be had in another Court. The plaintiff, purporting to be the next heir, brought a suit against the life-tenant of a samindari, and made another claimant to the succession to the samindari a defendant in the suit. The plaintiff prayed for a decree declaratory of the plaintiff's right to succeed on the death of the samindar, and made allegations of waste in respect of which he asked relief. Held that, even if the plaintiff had proved the alleged acts of waste, which he had not done, there was not a right to consequential relief which would entitle him to a declaratory decree. STRIMATHOO MOOTHOO VISITA RAGHOOCHANDAN

The plaintiff alleged that the decree had been fraudulently and collusively obtained on a bond in O T's name, which had been forged by J. The suit was brought on the 28th January 1878, and the plaintiff prayed that the sale might be cancelled, having been made in order to defeat his rights; that he might be declared the heir of O T; and that possession of the property with mesne profits might be awarded to him. Held on the evidence that the suit against B V was collusive, and that the sale in execution was in fraud of the plaintiff's right. 68. ——— Suit for declaration that defendant not the adopted son—Consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—A suit by persons who are merely distant relations and not reversionary heirs, for a declaration that the defendant is not the adopted son, is not maintainable under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). Every declaratory decree must be ancillary to some consequential relief obtainable thereby, and no such relief is possible in the case of distant and contingent, and not presumptive, reversionary heirs. ANYASA v. DASI I L R., 20 Bom., 203

69. ——— Suit to set aside will for invalidity—Hostile will.—A party who, subject to the life-interest of his mother, has a real and vested interest in remainder such as a Hindu has the power of creating, has a right to sue to obtain a declaration of the invalidity of a will set up to his prejudice, which purports to take away altogether his future right and interest in the property. ANUND MOHUN MULLICK v. wished the property to go after her death to her nephew, and that S, the person entitled to succeed her, had no right to the property. Held that such statement, as it was intended to operate, and would have operated, as a will in respect of the property, gave S a right to sue for a declaration that it should not have any effect as against him. KALIAN SINGH v. SANWAL SINGH I L R., 7 All., 163

71. ——— Suit by reversioner to set aside deed.—A Hindu died, leaving a widow, two daughters B and P, and a grandson B by his daughter B. The widow took possession of the estate and executed an ikarnama, wherein, after reciting that she was in possession "without the co-parcenary of any one," she declared that "B, the grandson of me, the declarant, is the heir of my late husband and of me the declarant," and that all the property was "the right of B as aforesaid," and continued:—"During the life of me, the declarant, I am in possession without the co-shareship of any one, and will continue to be so; after my death, B will get possession of the whole of the moveable and immovable properties appertaining to the estate of my late husband. No one else has the right or demand to the same; therefore, these words have been written and given as an ikarnama that it may be of use when occasion arises." Under the ikarnama, proceedings were completed for mutation of names in favour of B. Subsequently to the execution of the ikarnama, P gave birth to the plaintiff, and shortly afterwards died. The plaintiff, on attaining his majority and during the life of the widow and B, brought a suit against B to have the ikarnama set aside and declared void as against him, and for a declaration of his right to a moiety of the estate of his grandfather on the death of the widow. Held that he had no cause of action. BEHARY LALL MOHURWAR v. 72. ——— Discretion of Court to grant declaratory decree.—A suit by a reversioner to set aside a sur-i-peshgi lease executed more than nine years previously having failed by reason of the inability of the plaintiff to establish the claim set up in it, the High Court was asked to continue it by remanding it to the lower Court in order that a declaratory decree might finally be passed. Held that it was not a case in which it would be right for the Court to exercise its discretion. DOOLHUN JANKER KOOR v. 73. ——— Mortgage by Hindu widow in possession of property in lieu of maintenance—Specific Relief Act, s. 42—Hindu widow.—The name of the widow of a member of a joint Hindu family was allowed by the other members to be recorded in her husband's place in respect of his rights and interests in the family property by way of compliment to her, and they consented that, in lieu of maintenance, she should receive the profits of the property during her lifetime. The widow executed a deed of mortgage of the property, which did not specifically state the amount of the estate mortgaged, and also a bond, upon which the obligee obtained a decree, in execution whereof he attached part of the property recorded in the name of the obligor. The members of the family brought a suit, in which they prayed for a declaration that the mortgage executed by the widow was invalid, and that the property was not liable for the amount due thereunder, or to attachment in execution of the decree obtained upon the bond. Held that, if the widow's possession were only a possession by the plaintiffs' consent entitling her merely to receive the profits for her maintenance, the plaintiffs might eject her from the property, and that, before they could obtain a declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, they must seek their relief by ejectment, that being the substantial and real relief appropriate to the cause of action. On the other hand, if the widow had an estate in possession, given to her in exchange for her maintenance, she had an interest which she was competent to alienate. Held also that, inasmuch as the deed of mortgage contained no description of the amount of the estate mortgaged by the widow, and upon its face mortgaged her share of the property only, it could have no operation beyond her share, and the Court would not be justified in granting a declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, merely because the plaintiffs apprehended some possible future claim based upon the allegation that the transfer comprised the entire estate. BHOLAI v. KALI

[I. L. R., 8 All., 70]

74. ——— Suit by reversioner for possession—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Civil Procedure Code, s. 578.—A suit brought against K, the widow of R, a Hindu, by the representatives of R's brothers, H and P, for possession of his estate, ended in a compromise by which the defendant recognised the plaintiffs' rights, and conceded that the family was joint. After K's death, M, a daughter of R, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and, upon these findings, gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Held that the prayer in the plaint was wide enough to include a prayer for declaratory relief such as the first Court had given. Also that it could not be said that a daughter's son was not, under any condition, competent to maintain a declaratory suit of this nature during the lifetime of his mother or maternal aunt, in respect of his maternal grandfather's property, to the full ownership of which he had a reversionary right. Also that the awarding of declaratory relief, as regulated by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, is a discretionary power which Courts of equity are empowered to exercise with reference to the circumstances of each case and the nature of the facts stated in the plaint, and the prayer of the plaintiff; that so long as a Court of first instance possesses jurisdiction to entertain a declaratory suit, and, entering into the merits of the case, arrives at right conclusions and awards a declaratory decree, such a decree cannot be reversed in appeal simply because the discretion has been improperly exercised; and that such improper exercise of discretion under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act has no higher footing than that of an error, defect, or irregularity, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, within the meaning of s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code. This does not imply that, even in cases where the discretionary power to award declaratory relief has been exercised wholly arbitrarily, and in a manner grossly inconsistent with judicial principles, the Court of appeal would have no power to interfere. *Ram Kanaye Chuckerbuly v. 75. ——— Decree against widow—Fraud—Reversioner.—Upon the death of R, a Hindu who was separate from his brother S, his widow G became life-tenant of his estate, and his daughter B became entitled to succeed after G's death. In 1882 a suit was brought by S and G against V to recover the value of a branch of a mango tree wrongfully taken by the defendant, and for maintenance of possession over the grove in which the tree was situate. The suit was dismissed, and it was decided that R was not the owner of the grove, nor was G the owner. In 1885 B brought a suit against G, S, V, and A, to whom V had sold some of the trees, claiming a declaration of her right and possession of the grove, upon the allegation that the proceedings of 1882 were carried on in collusion between S and G on the one hand and V on the other, for the purpose of improperly preventing her from asserting her rights. Held also that, if it should turn out that there was fraud and collusion in the proceedings of 1882 and an attempt to interfere with the plaintiff's right as reversioner to the grove on the death of her mother, she would be entitled in the present suit to claim not only a declaration of her right, but also to have the grove reduced into the

5. DECLARATION OF TITLE.

76. ——— Intention to interfere with rights.—To entitle a plaintiff to a declaratory decree, he must show some cause of suit, something more than a wish to interfere with his rights. Intention to interfere with such rights should be held to constitute a cause of action, if at all, only when it is clearly shown. JESMANER KOOR v. DEBER DYAL RAS 3 N. W., 137

77. ——— Obligation to show title.—Discretion of Court.—In a suit for a declaration of right, a plaintiff ought on the face of his plaint to show not merely that he has a title, but that circumstances exist which necessitate his application to the Court for a declaratory decree. It is discretionary with the Court to make a declaratory decree. KHADIM ALI v. NAZIR BHOUM 3 N. W., 262

78. ——— Hostile act—Invasion of right.—In order to entitle a plaintiff to a bare declaration of right under s. 15, Act VIII of 1859, he must make out, to the satisfaction of the Court, some act done by the defendant which is hostile to and invades that right, and which would justify an injunction or a decree for damages, or a decree for delivery of possession being passed against the defendant, if the Court had so thought fit to exercise its discretion. *KANARAM CHUCKERBUTTY v. 79. ——— Inability to make binding decrees—One-sided cases.—Declaratory orders ought not, as a general rule, to be made in cases which are wholly one-sided, and in which the decrees would not be binding upon the parties really interested. If the defendant should succeed in establishing his right. BRUJO KISHORE DASSEN v. SREENATH BOSH

80. ——— Probable and inevitable injury.—A declaratory decree ought only to be passed where some injury appears so probable as to lead to the conclusion that, unless stayed by the declaratory decree, the incipient or threatened injury is inevitable. PURSEJAN KHATOON v. BYKUNT CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY 7 W. R., 96

81. ——— Prospective injury—Suit to declare user.—In a suit to establish plaintiff's right to the reasonable use, for the purpose of irrigation, of water the flow of which had been impeded by a bund erected by defendants,—Held that, even though plaintiffs had not yet been endamaged by the acts of the defendants, it was in the discretion of the Court, if they proved their right, to give them a declaratory decree recognizing that right, seeing that serious consequences might otherwise result. WUZERROOD-DEEN v. SHEO BUND LALL 11 W. R., 265

82. ——— Anticipation of injury—Annoyance.—Courts cannot by anticipation grant a decree prohibiting a defendant from annoying a plaintiff. It must be shown that some substantial annoyance or injury which the Court can recognize has been actually committed before the Courts will interfere. KASIM ALI KHAN v. BIRJ KISHORE
[2 N. W., 182]

83. ——— Cause of action.—A suit was brought against the plaintiff by his tenants for an illegal distress in attaching crops raised by them on the land let to them by him. The present defendant, in the course of that suit, presented a petition to the Court, in which he stated that he was the owner of the land on which the crops attached had been raised. The plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration of his title and confirmation of possession, alleging that the defendants' statement affected his (plaintiff's) title by throwing a cloud over it. Held there was no cause of action. Per PAUL, J.—A suit merely in anticipation of a threatened ejectment will not lie. There must be something in the case either in the nature of an invasion of some right, or in the shape of an impediment or obstacle in the way of full enjoyment of proprietary right, to found a claim to a declaratory relief; but a mere allegation, or a mere threat without action taken or founded upon it, will not be sufficient to entitle a party to a declaration of his title. JAN ALI v. KHONDYAR ABDUR KHUMA

84. ——— Allegation injurious to plaintiff—Consequential relief.—The words of s. 15, Act VIII of 1859, are to be interpreted as giving a right to obtain a declaration of title only in those cases in which the Court could have granted relief if relief had been prayed for. A suit by a party in possession for a declaration of title and to set aside, not any deed nor any act of the defendant, but a mere allegation on his part that he holds under a certain tenure, is not maintainable. *NILMONY SINGH DEO v. 91. — Suit by person out of possession—Omission to ask for possession—Refusal to recognize proprietary right.—In a suit in which the plaintiffs stated that they had already obtained a decree for possession of certain land, and had received formal possession, and stated their cause of action to be "the defendant's act of not recognizing us as their landlords and thereby preventing us exercising our proprietary rights in respect of the land in suit, and not allowing us to make a measurement of that land, and also withholding payment of rent" praying for a decree establishing their proprietary right and declaring the defendants to be their tenants,—Held that the declaratory decree prayed for could be made notwithstanding the plaintiffs might have asked for possession of the lands. LOKENATH SURMA v. KESHAB RAM DOSS . . . 1 L. R., 13 Calc., 147

92. — Denial of title without injurious act—Annuance.—In suits for a declaration of title to a divided share of ancestral property, the ground alleged in each case for seeking the declaration was that the representatives of the brothers of the plaintiff's father had refused to be parties to the registering of the property in plaintiff's name, and had executed a deed of sale of it to a third party (third defendant), and registered him as the purchaser. The Court of first instance in each case decreed for the plaintiff. The Appellate Court, following Padanagilum Pillai v. Shanmugham Pillai, 2 Mad., 333, dismissed the suits on the ground that the plaintiffs were not in a position to maintain them. On special appeal,—Held that the suits should be remanded for a declaration of the plaintiff's title, if established. To maintain a suit for a declaration of title, some adverse act, intended and calculated to be prejudicial to the title which the plaintiff seeks a declaration of, must appear to have been done by the defendant. The mere denial of the title, or doing an act which causes annoyance, cannot imperil the plaintiff's title, nor have any serious effect on the quiet enjoyment of his proprietary right, and is not sufficient to support such a suit. The principle upon which the decision in Padanagilum Pillai v. Shanmugham Pillai proceeds is inapplicable to suits under s. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. KARYAN v. PERIA SIDDEN, KARYAN v. LINGA GAUNDAN, KARYAN v. DODDALI [6 Mad., 307]

93. — Failure of previous suit for possession of land—Res judicata, Plea of.—Suit brought by plaintiff against the first three defendants as his tenants on kanam, and the fourth, the representative of a rival jenmi, to obtain a declaration of title as jenmi. Plaintiff had previously sued the first three defendants to establish the relation of jenmi and kanamkar and to recover the land. He failed and then brought the present suit. Held that this was a case of the employment of the device of a suit for a declaration of title in order to get back land by a crooked and not legal process, after failure to recover by proper legal means, the intention being to cut off the defendants (the tenants) from the plea of res judicata. The Court, which had a discretion as to whether such a suit should be permitted, ought at once to have said that it should not. Where there are no interests to be protected, there is no foundation for a suit for a declaratory decree. SHUNGUNY MENON v. KALAMPALLY VALIA NAIR . . . 6 Mad., 117

94. ——— Injury or hostile act giving cause of action—Fraud.—In a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to, and confirmation of his possession of, certain lands which he alleged had first been sold to him by one of the defendants and then sold by his vendor to the other defendant. —Held that, in the absence of proof of fraud in the later sale, there was no cause of action. ABDOOL AZIM CHOWDHRY v. 95. ——— Suit for ejectment—Intention to evade stamp laws.—The provision as to declaratory suits requires great care and circumspection in its application. 96. ——— Improper execution of decree by ameen—Omission to give possession of land correctly.—In a suit for declaration of right and confirmation of possession by setting aside certain improper chittahs prepared by a Civil Court ameen while deputed to deliver possession in execution of a decree. —Held that, when in execution the ameen measured a portion of plaintiff's land as covered by defendant's decree, and delivered over possession to defendant, taking receipts and issuing proclamations as required by s. 324, Act VIII of 1869, a cause of action arose to plaintiff under the circumstances against defendant, and the suit would lie. GOVIND PERSHAD DOSS v. It was stated in the plaint that the suit was brought to set aside the fraudulent objections and to establish the full title of A as purchaser. Held (MITTER, J., dissenting) that the suit would not lie, the unregistered deed could not be admitted in evidence, nor parol evidence given of the contract under which A alleged he acquired his title. RAHMATULLA v. 113. — Suit by one member of joint Hindu family for declaration of right to receive share—Partition.—A joint Hindu family, consisting of three brothers, enjoyed an undivided one-third share of certain lands. One member sued the others for partition of the family property, claiming to have his right declared to receive one-third of the share of the family in the profits of the said lands. Held that the Court was not debarred from granting the relief prayed for by the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. PANCHANADAYAN v. 116. — Suit by person in possession of land to establish title—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 15—Defendant claiming under decree of Small Cause Court.—The plaintiff, in a suit to establish her lakhiraj right to lakhiraj land, stated in her plaint that she was in possession of certain land by virtue of the will of her husband; that while in possession of the land, a suit was brought against her in the Small Cause Court for rent by the defendants, who obtained a decree; and that, there being no appeal against the decision, the lakhiraj rights in respect of the lands were consequently injured; she, therefore, brought the present suit. Held that such a suit was not maintainable, as the claim which the defendants set up was no longer in the condition of a mere assertion or a claim for right, but had passed into a decree. Held, further, that in this case the plaintiff was not without a remedy, for if a further

II, art. 130.*—In a suit instituted in 1877, A prayed for a declaration that he had a lakhiraj title to certain lands; the defendant stated that the lands for a declaration of a title to which A now sued formed part of certain lands which had been the subject of resumption proceedings, which were terminated in 1863 by a decree declaring that the lands which were the subject of that suit, including the lands now claimed by A, were not lakhiraj. It being found as a fact that A had neither been a party to, nor been presented in, the resumption proceedings, that he had been in quiet and undisturbed possession of the lands which he now claimed for more than twelve years before the institution of his suit, and that proceedings had been taken by the defendant calculated to disturb such possession,—Held that A was entitled, under s. 42 of Act I of 1877, to the declaration prayed for. ABHOY CHURN PAL v. The latter denied S's proprietary right to the land and his liability to pay ground-rent, and S's suit was in consequence dismissed. Thereupon S sued B in the Civil Court for a declaration of proprietary right to the land and of his right to receive ground-rent. Held that the suit was not barred by the proviso to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, because it did not include a claim for arrears of ground-rent; and that the suit was one in which the specific relief claimed might properly be granted. land which had been collected by B. It appeared that there had been no denial of the plaintiffs' rights before 1889, that no rent had been collected for several years before suit, the mortgagees who had remained in possession as lessees after the execution of the mortgages having refused to attorn to B. Held that the suits were not barred by Specific Relief Act, s. 42, for want of a prayer for possession; that the suits were not barred by limitation save as to the claim for rent; that the transactions having been proved to be benami in character, the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration of their two-thirds right under the mortgages of 1884 and a like declaration as to half of the mortgage of 1890; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession of the mortgage documents of 1884 and the other documents connected therewith, but not the others. MAHANALA BHATTA v. 121. — Sale in execution of decree of property not belonging to judgment-debtor—Right of owner to bring suit to establish title and not wait for dispossession.—In execution of a decree on a mortgage, certain property was sold which the plaintiff in this suit claimed as his own under a sale to himself by the sons of the judgment-debtor. He applied to the Court to have the sale set aside, but failing in his application he sued both the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser for a declaration of his title to the property in question. The Assistant Judge held on appeal that the suit was not maintainable on the grounds that a separate suit could not be brought, as the question of title was one for decision in the execution-proceedings, and that, even if the point could be raised in a separate suit, the present suit was premature, as the plaintiff should have waited till he was dispossessed by the auction-purchaser. Held that the suit was not premature. A person, whose property is sold in execution of a decree against a third party, is not bound to wait till he is dispossessed by the auction-purchaser. As soon as his title is denied, he is entitled to bring his suit. SHIVRAM CHINTAMAN v. JYU. I. L. R., 13 Bom., 34

It was found that the plaintiffs had separated themselves from the defendants, and had for more than twelve years been excluded to their own knowledge from the joint family property. Held that if, as alleged by the plaintiffs, plaintiff No. 1 was the de jure ejaman of the family, he was entitled to the possession and management of the family property, and a suit for a mere declaration of his right would not lie. *Chanda v. The defendant claimed to be legitimate according to the customary law governing the family, although his parents might not have been married at the time of his birth, by reason of his parents having performed the ceremony of pariyaam before his birth. Held that the suit was not precluded by Specific Relief Act, s. 42. CHINNAMMAL v. 126. — Refusal of declaratory decree, the case made for it being defective—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Under the Specific Relief Act, s. 42, a suit was brought for a decree declaratory of the plaintiffs' title to be mutwallis and managers of property from ancient times connected with religious observances, viz., a ghat upon the Jumna with temples adjoining; of their title also to receive a proportion of the offerings; and they also claimed to have the proceeds of a decree obtained by the defendants against a third party spent upon repairs. Held that the suit had been rightly dismissed in the first Court. Even if the evidence had shown that the plaintiffs had some rights in respect of the property in question, they had, nevertheless, so far failed in giving definite proof of their claims that they were not entitled to the decree claimed. No decision was, however, given, nor was any opinion expressed, with respect to other rights, which either of the parties might have, or claim to have, relating to the property. MAINA v. cution of a decree obtained by defendant No. 2 against defendant No. 1, who held it as the plaintiff's tenants, that the plaintiff had intervened unsuccessfully in the execution-proceedings and had been referred to a regular suit, and that the land had been brought to sale and purchased by defendant No. 2, who was now in possession. Held that the suit was not maintainable for want of a prayer for possession. KUNHAMMA v. 129. — Mere possession on the one side and unjustifiable dispossession on the other—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Right of the possessor dispossessed by a wrong-doer, as against the latter—Injunction—Wakf.—Lawful possession of land is sufficient evidence of right as owner as against a person who has no title whatever, and who is a mere trespasser. The former can obtain a declaratory decree and an injunction restraining the wrong-doer. In such a suit the defence was that the land was wakf, and the defendant mutwalli of it. Both Courts found that the plaintiff was in possession as purchaser from some of those who were entitled to sell. But the first Court did not find a fact which the Appellate Court found, viz., that the property had been constituted wakf. Both Courts, however, concurred in the finding that the defendant, at all events, was not the mutwalli, and had no title. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaratory decree against this defendant as to his right and an injunction restraining him from interfering with his possession. For the purposes of the plaintiff's claiming such a decree, it was not necessary that he should negative the wakf as to the validity of the endowment, no decision being needed. This could not be decided either way in this suit, as parties interested were not before the Court. ISMAIL ARIFF v. MAHOMED GHOUSE

The plaint also contained a prayer for general relief. At the trial, both plaintiff and defendant failed to prove any title to the land, but the plaintiff proved that he had been for ten years in possession and had built a shed on it. Held that no declaration of the plaintiff's title could be made; but held, on the authority of Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghousa, I. L. R., 20 Cal., 834; L. R., 20 I. A., 99, that the plaintiff was lawfully entitled to the land and to the shed thereon. GANGARAM CHIMNA PATIL v. It appeared on the evidence for the defence that the defendant was in possession of part of the property, but no issue had been framed as to the maintainability of the suit under the last clause of the Specific Relief Act, s. 42. Held (on appeal by the defendant) that the Court of first instance should take evidence and try an issue specifically directed to this question. It having appeared on the evidence recorded on that issue that the defendant was substantially in possession of the office of Sheik and of its emoluments, —Held that the suit was not maintainable, although an injunction was asked for as relief consequential on the declaration. The plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their title to this property and for a declaration that the karar was not binding on them. An issue was framed on the question whether the suit was maintainable for want of a prayer for all relief consequential on these declarations. Held (1) that the suit was not maintainable for want of a prayer for possession of the lands under demise; (2) that the plaintiffs should not be permitted to amend the plaint on appeal by the addition of such a prayer. *NARAYANA v. It appeared that defendant No. 1 had obtained a decree against the plaintiff's father, establishing his legitimacy and declaring him entitled to receive maintenance out of the estate in question. In accordance with this decree, the talukdari settlement officer (defendant No. 2), who was in management of the estate under Act XXI of 1841, paid defendant No. 1 an allowance of Rs 200 a month on account of his maintenance. The plaintiff alleged that the payment to defendant No. 1 was illegal and wrongful, but he did not ask for an injunction restraining him from receiving the allowance. The defendants contended that the suit was not maintainable because the plaintiff had sued for a mere declaration of title without asking for consequential relief. Held (CANDY, J., doubting) that the suit was barred under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiff had omitted to seek the relief of an injunction against defendant No. 1, restraining him from receiving future payment of maintenance. Held, further, that plaintiff was at liberty to amend his plaint by praying for an injunction as against both defendants. *SARDARSINGJI v. 135. — Executor or administrator of a shareholder, Rights of—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—"Holding a share," Meaning of—Agreement, Construction of—Objection taken for first time in appeal.—Prior to the year 1863, W W carried on an extensive timber trade in Burma. In that year the defendant company was formed for the purpose of taking over the business from him together with the capital and assets engaged therein. The nominal capital of the company was Rs 25,00,00, divided into one thousand shares of Rs 2,500 each. On the 22nd July 1864, an agreement carrying out the above object was executed between W W and the defendant company. This agreement set forth the assets and property to be transferred, and classified them as (a) "fixed assets," which consisted of immovable property, buildings, etc., valued at Rs 2,76,000 or thereabouts; and (b) assets other than fixed assets which consisted of what was called "forest operations," and of valuable contracts, rights, and concessions from the King of Burma, etc. The agreement further specified the consideration to be paid to W W for each of these classes of assets. For the "fixed assets" he was (under the 12th clause of the agreement) to receive one hundred fully paid-up shares of the company. That clause contained certain provisions as to the payment of the ordinary dividend upon those shares, and concluded with a provision that the directors of the company should not be bound to consent to or to recognize as valid any assignment made by W W, his executors or administrators of the shares, or any of them, within five years from the date of the registration of the company. For the remaining assets it was provided by the 13th clause of the agreement that W W, his executors or administrators, should be entitled, so long as he or they should hold the hundred shares, to an extra preferential dividend, payable out of such surplus net profits as might remain in any year after paying a dividend of twelve per cent. on all the shares of the company, including the said hundred shares, and after setting apart an amount (left to the discretion of the directors) for the reserve fund. The said extra or preferential dividend was to be one-third of such surplus net profits. The said 13th clause also provided that, if W W died within the above stated period of five years, his executors or administrators should not be entitled to the said extra or preferential dividend after the expiration of the said period, notwithstanding they might continue to hold the said shares. Subsequently to the execution of this agreement, the business and assets were transferred to the company by W W, and one hundred fully paid-up shares were duly allotted to him under cl. 12, and his name was entered on the register of shareholders. In 1888, W W, then domiciled in England, died. By his will he appointed his three brothers—E W, L A W, and A F W—his executors, and he directed that his executors should hold the said shares and all his interest therein and attached to the holding thereof upon trust for such of his said brothers as might survive him, if more than one, as joint tenants. E W died in the testator's lifetime, and only A F W proved the will. On the 27th September 1888, letters of administration, with the will annexed, were granted by the High Court of Bombay to the plaintiff in this suit (F Y S) as attorney for the said executor A F W. On the 29th September 1889, the said letters of administration were produced to, and registered with, the defendant company. The hundred shares continued to stand in the testator's name in the register of shareholders. In a parallel column in the register, under the heading "Remarks," the following entry was made:—"Administration in India to the estate of W W has been granted to Mr. F Y S as attorney for A F W." Save for this entry, the register remained unaltered after the testator's death. The plaintiff now sued to have it declared that cl. 13 of the agreement was still in operation, and that, as such administrator as aforesaid, he was entitled to the extra or preferential dividend payable on the said one hundred shares if and when there should be sufficient net profits to allow payments thereof under the said clause. The company disputed the plaintiff's claim. They contended that A F W, the proving executor of the testator's will, had ceased to hold the shares as executor, and was holding them as trustee under the specific bequest in the will, and that he was only entitled to the preferential dividends if, at the time when such dividends were declared, he was holding the shares in the capacity of executor and as an undistributed part of the testator's estate. They insisted that the plaintiff should prove that he so held the shares before he could be entitled to the declaration sought for. The executor was examined in England on commission. He deposed that the estate had been got in, and the debts paid; that the estate had not been divided, because it would not be in accordance with the private wishes of the testator which they (i.e., he and his brother L A W) were aware of; that apart from these private wishes, there was no reason why the estate should not be divided between his brother and himself. Held by FARRAN, J., and by the Court of appeal that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration sought for. The executor or his attorney (the plaintiff) was still the registered holder of the shares, and under cl. 13 of the agreement it was intended that W W, his executors or administrators, should be entitled to the extra dividend so long as he or they should be registered holder or holders of the shares, without reference to the beneficial interest therein. There was nothing to be found in the agreement, express or implied, showing the intention of the parties to regard anything but the legal holding, and to go beyond that holding would virtually be to add a new term to the agreement. On appeal, the defendants contended that the Court would not make a declaratory decree with regard to a right which (as in the present case) was future and contingent, there being no fund actually in existence, when the suit was brought, from which a preferential dividend could be claimed, and no certainty that there ever would be such a fund. Held by the Court of appeal that the present case was one in which, in the interests of both parties, the Court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, should make a declaration as to the right in question. The right was existent, and although the exercise of it was undoubtedly contingent on there being a balance of profits as contemplated by cl. 13 of the agreement, the very nature of the agreement assumed that there might, and probably would, be such a balance, and a large sum had been already applied towards the dividend in question. Further, it was intended that the directors should exercise their discretion as to the amount to be carried to the reserve fund, upon which the balance of profit available for the preferential dividend depended. It was therefore, from the very nature of the case, important that the directors should know for certain whether the right to a preferential dividend was still in existence as contended by the plaintiff, or had come to an end. The circumstance, moreover, that the objection had been taken for the first time on appeal would by itself be fatal to it. BOMBAY-BREMAN TRADING CORPORATION v. SMITH that the land in question had been given to the plaintiff by his father, and had subsequently been attached and brought to sale in execution of a decree against the plaintiff's father, and had been purchased by the defendants who were put into constructive possession under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 389, the land being in the actual possession of tenants. Held that the suit for a declaration merely was not maintainable under the Specific Relief Act, s. 42. KRISHNAHUPATI DEVU v. [I. L. R., 18 Mad., 405]

137. Consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—At a sale in execution of a decree against the plaintiffs, the pleader who had acted for the plaintiffs purchased their property with his own money, but in the name of his mohurrir, and for a very inadequate sum. The plaintiffs thereupon brought a suit against the defendants (the pleader and his mohurrir) for a declaration that the pleader-defendant, in so purchasing, was a trustee on their behalf, for an order directing the defendants to reconvey the property to the plaintiffs, and for other relief. At the time of filing the suit, possession of the land sold had not been given to anybody. Held that s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) was no bar to the suit, as being one merely for a declaratory decree without consequential relief. AGHORE NATH CHACKERBUTTY v. 138. Suit for a declaration that plaintiff's interests are not affected by sale in execution of decree—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Further relief.—The plaintiffs were purchasers at a sale held in execution of a decree for money, and had obtained possession. Before that decree had been executed, the property in question was mortgaged to two other persons. After the purchase by the plaintiffs, the mortgagees, with knowledge of the auction-purchasers' rights, brought a suit for sale upon their mortgage without making the former auction-purchasers parties. They obtained a decree, and brought the mortgaged property to sale, and it was purchased by N S and another. The former auction-purchasers thereupon sued the purchasers under the decree upon the mortgage for a declaration that they and their interests were not affected by the suit for sale and by the decree for sale and the sale in execution of that decree. Held the plaintiffs in that suit were not bound either to tender the mortgage-money, or to offer to redeem, or to frame their suit as a suit for redemption, and that their not having done so did not deprive them of their right to a declaration. Bhawanji Prasad v. his debt by sale of the mortgaged property. Before the property was advertised for sale, the defendants, who were D's brothers, objected under s. 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), alleging that D was not the sole owner of the property; that they were joint owners with him; that they had set aside the property for religious purposes; and that D had no right to mortgage it. The Court executing the decree thereupon ordered that the applicants' (defendants') claim should be notified in the proclamation of sale. Plaintiff then filed a suit against the defendants, praying for a declaration that the property belonged to D exclusively, and the defendants had no right or interest in it. Held that, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. Plaintiff having himself purchased the property after this claim for declaration had been allowed by the Subordinate Judge, it was contended that he was not entitled any longer to a declaratory decree. Held that the change of circumstances brought about by the plaintiff himself purchasing the property did not take away the right to sue which had already accrued to him. Gorinda v. The plaint was accordingly amended, but the District Court, whilst holding that the appointment of the pattamali was invalid, dismissed the suit on the ground that the amendment had been made after the lapse of the period of limitation. Held that the suit for a declaration would lie without consequential relief being prayed for, inasmuch as its object was not to establish any legal character or any right to any property in the plaintiffs, but was in effect to have an act done by the other trustees in contravention of duty declared null and void. Even if s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act applied to such a decree, which was doubtful, no further relief than the declaration was necessary, as the custody of the documents and jewels by the pattamali was merely that of a servant under the trustees, with whom the possession in fact and in law remained. There was therefore nothing of which delivery could be sought from the possession of the pattamali and no question of limitation arose. JANARDANA SHETTI GOVINDARAJAN v. BADAVA SHETTI GIRI

In a suit brought for confirmation of possession by a declaration of right and determination of boundaries in respect of certain land of which the plaintiff was in possession, by setting aside a new thakbust map, prepared by the Deputy Collector, and a proceeding before that officer to which the plaintiff was no party, the plaintiff not having gone before the Deputy Collector and pointed out to him the grounds upon which he contended the map was not correct, Held that the plaintiff ought not to have a declaratory decree. MOTEE LALL v. 143. — Discretion of Court—Hostile acts.—In suits for declaratory decrees under s. 15, Act VIII of 1859, it is entirely in the discretion of the Court to grant or to withhold relief, and each case must be judged by its own particular circumstances. Where parties in possession of certain lands sued for a declaration of title, not only on the allegation that defendant had caused a demarcation to be made behind their backs, annexing a slice of their lands to defendant's estate, but had also, under colour of this proceeding, sued plaintiff's tenants for rent under Act X, and proceeded against them to enforce a measurement under Act VI (Bengal) of 1862, it was held that acts had been done hostile and obviously injurious to the plaintiffs, and that the suit would lie. PURSE JAY KHATOON v. Prior to the decree, one J S, who had purchased the interest of S, was made a party to the suit, and he sold his interest to the plaintiff's father in 1861. In his favour the rights they had inherited from their father. He then applied to the Collector, and, in spite of the plaintiff's objection, had his name recorded in the town as proprietor in succession to M. To cancel the effect of this proceeding, the plaintiff sued for a declaration of title and confirmation of possession. Held that, as the plaintiff was in possession and had been so from the time of the conveyance by J B, there was no necessity for his taking out execution of the foreclosure decree, the expiry of which, therefore, could not deprive him of his title to the declaratory decree now sought, the defendant's conduct in the mutation proceeding being sufficient cause of action. ANNAK RAM v. of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), because the plaintiffs might have sought further relief than a mere declaration of title, and omitted to do so. He was of opinion that the attachment constituted a dispossession, and that the plaintiffs might have asked to be replaced in possession, or, at any rate, for the removal of the attachment. Held by the High Court on appeal that the plaint was not open to objection on the ground that it only asked for a declaratory decree without any consequential relief. Held that the prohibitory order to D did not constitute a dispossession of D and still less of the plaintiffs, and that they could not have properly asked for removal of the attachment by a cancellation of the prohibitory order to D so long as they admitted that D had an interest in the attached property. Held also that the plaintiffs could not have properly asked for any consequential relief in their suit, but that, when they instituted it, they were entitled, and indeed bound, to ask for a declaration of their right, if only to prevent a purchaser at the sale, under the defendants' decree against D, from afterwards alleging that he had purchased without notice of the plaintiffs' claim. NARAYANRAY DAMODAR v. After the date of sale, but before the whole of the purchase-money had been paid into Court, X applied to the Court by petition, praying that the amount due to him might be paid to A, to whom, he alleged, he had assigned it. Before any order was made on this petition, B, C, D, and E, in execution of separate decrees against X, attached the sum in Court. The District Munsif ordered that B, C, D, and E should be paid before A. A brought a suit against B, C, D, and E in another District Munsif's Court for a declaration that he was entitled to the money and to set aside the said order. The Munsif set aside the order and declared the plaintiff to be entitled to the amount. B, C, D, and E appealed against this decree, and the District Court passed a decree dismissing A's suit. Held on second appeal by A that he was entitled to a decree, declaring his title to the amount claimed. CHATHU v. 10. RENT AND ENHANCEMENT OF RENT.

168. ———— Decree as to rate of rent—Consequential relief—Decree before rent is due.—A decree that the defendant is liable to pay rent at a certain rate before any rent is due, being a mere declaratory decree without any consequential relief, ought not to be made. Per PEACOCK, C.J. BOYDONATH v. RAMJOY DEY . . . 9 W. R., 292

169. ———— Right to enhance on future service of notice—Enhancement of rent—Reg. V of 1812—Notice.—A decree declaratory of the plaintiff's general right to enhance on future service of notice may be passed in a suit under Regulation V of 1812, where the plaint was for enhancement at a certain specified rate, and in which service of notice was held to be not proved. ISHUR CHUNDER MUNDUL v. SHAM CHUNDER DOSS

170. ———— Suit for enhancement without notice—Declaration of right.—Plaintiff sued for arrears of rent at enhanced rates without notice. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent at the enhanced rate, but the question as to the liability of tenure having been fully tried, he was entitled to a decree declaratory of his right to enhancement. The Court had no power in this suit to try the validity of the lakhiraj tenure set up by defendant as to some of the land; plaintiff should have proved that it was his mal land, and that the defendant had paid rent for it. He had failed to do so, and the Court refused, therefore, to declare his right to enhance the rent of such land. GUMANT KAZI v. HARIDHAR MOOKERJEE enhanced rate under Act X of 1859. The Court of first instance dismissed the case on the ground that the defendants had shown that the tenure was not liable to enhancement. On appeal to the Judge, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on the ground that he had not proved service of notice, but a declaratory decree was given that the tenure was liable to enhancement. Held that the Judge should simply have dismissed the suit; Act X of 1859 gives him no power to make such a declaratory decree. NARAKANT MUZAMDAR v. 172. Suit for declaration of title to land with a view to enhance the rent—Discretion of Court.—A declaratory decree may be made only where the declaration of right may be the foundation of relief to be got somewhere. Thus a suit to establish a title to land, with a view to taking proceedings in the Collector's Court under Act X of 1859 to enhance the rent, is one in which a declaratory decree may be made. The Judicial Committee will not on light grounds interfere with the exercise by a High Court of its discretion in granting a declaratory decree, the suit being one in which a declaratory decree may be made. SADUT ALI KHAN v. 173. Failure to prove notice of enhancement—Discretion of Court.—If, in a suit for enhancement, the plaintiff fails to prove that he has served the defendant with a proper notice, the Court is not bound to make a declaratory decree, but whether it shall do so or not lies entirely in its discretion. GUNNES CHUNDER HAZRA v. RAMPRIA DEBIA

174. Declaratory decree—"Further relief"—Arrears of rent—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—In a suit for a declaratory decree in respect of plaintiff's right to certain land where it appeared that rent was due to the plaintiff in respect of such land, if his case were a true one, and where such rent was not claimed,—Held that the "further relief" referred to in the proviso to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is further relief in relation to "the legal character or right as to any property which any person is entitled to, and whose title to such character or right any person denies or

11. ORDERS OF CRIMINAL COURT.

175. Order convicting of mischief—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 18—Suit after criminal proceedings under ss. 430, 432, Penal Code.—Certain criminal proceedings having been successfully taken against the plaintiff's tenants for mischief done in respect to a nullah, coming under either s. 430 or 432 (injury or obstruction to flow of water) of the Penal Code, the plaintiff brought a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that the nullah was his own exclusive property, and therefore not such a stream as could come under either of those sections. Held that it was within the discretion of the Court under s. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code to allow such a suit to be brought. KARTICK PARAMANICK v. KISHEN MOHUN MITTER

[22 W. R., 329]

176. Order as to nuisance—Suit to set aside order of Magistrate under Act XXV of 1861, ss. 308 to 315—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—The plaintiff built a bridge over a certain khal (canal), which was removed by order of the Magistrate under Ch. XX of the Criminal Procedure Code; the defendant, it was alleged, set the Magistrate in motion. The plaintiff now sued the defendant for a declaration of his right to erect the bridge in question, and to have the order of the Magistrate set aside. Held that no such suit would lie. The Judge in the Court below held that the suit would lie to try the plaintiff's right to erect a bridge over the khal. Held on appeal the suit ought to have been dismissed. MADHAB CHANDRA GUHO v. KAMALA KANT CHUCKERBUTTY

177. Order on dispute as to possession—Suit to set aside Magistrate's order under s. 321, Criminal Procedure Code, 1861—Order not put in force.—Plaintiff's right to a declaratory decree as to the erroneousness of the Magistrate's order, passed under s. 321, Code of Criminal Procedure, permitting defendant to erect a drain-pipe to take water from plaintiff's reservoir, was held to be not affected by the fact that the Magistrate's order had not been put in force. MAGHEBAJ SINGH v. RASHDHAREE SINGH

178. Trespass to land—Order under Ch. XL, Criminal Procedure Code—Right to suit for declaratory decree.—A person whose right to land has been disputed, and who has obtained an order under Ch. XL of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872, from a Magistrate declaring him entitled to retain possession, is entitled to sue for a declaration of his right to the land. NARASIMMA CHARYA v. 170. ———— Order as to rival hats—
Course of action—Consequential relief.—When a plaintiff alleged that he had held a hat on his own land for many years on Tuesdays and Fridays; that the defendant had set up a rival hat on these days and prevented persons from attending the plaintiff's hat; that this led to disturbance which ended in an order being made by the Magistrate prohibiting the plaintiff from holding his hat on the said days, and that the plaintiff suffered loss and damage in consequence.—Held that, assuming these facts to be true, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree, declaring, as against the defendant, that the plaintiff had a right to hold his hat on Tuesdays and Fridays. GORI MOHUN MULLICK v. TARABONY CHOWDHURANI

180. ———— Declaration of title to land
—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 133, order under, for removal of an obstruction standing up a certain land—Ownership of such land—Public roads—Bombay Land Revenue Act (Bombay Act V of 1879), s. 37.—A Magistrate made an order against the plaintiff under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) for the removal of a certain otta standing in front of the plaintiff's shop as an obstruction to the public way. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that the land on which the otta stood was his property, and not that of the Government. Held that, the public roads being vested by s. 37 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) in the Government of Bombay, they were "interested to deny" the plaintiff's title to the land, and therefore, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff (subject to the discretion of the Court) was entitled to a declaration as against the Government of his right to the land, and the plaintiff was not called upon to wait until the Government had taken possession of the land. It was contended that the jurisdiction of the Court to make the declaration prayed for was taken away by the last clause of s. 133, which provides that "no order made by a Magistrate under this section shall be called in question in any Civil Court." Held that the Magistrate's order under this section is not a conclusive determination of the question of title. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. tenure-holder declared—Civil Procedure Code, 1889, s. 15—Consequential relief.—A suit in which the plaintiff prayed for a decree declaring that the defendant was not, as had been fraudulently recorded in the revenue registers, a perpetual lessee, but only tenant-at-will of certain villages, of which the plaintiff was proprietor, held to be maintainable. MIRJAN c. [8 Bom., A. C., 35]

183. ———— Denial of plaintiff's right
as audhikari—Course of action.—In a suit for declaration or confirmation of the plaintiff's title to the office of the audhikari of the Distro Sastur, alleged to be situate at Nowgung, where the defendant in his written statement claimed to be the audhikari, and alleged that the headship was situated elsewhere, the defendant was held to be asserting a title adverse to the plaintiff sufficient to justify a declaratory decree. KOONDO NATH SURMA GOSSAMEE v. DHEER CHUNDER SURMA ADHIKARI GOSSAMEE
[20 W. R., 345]

184. ———— Suit for declaration on low stamp duty to obtain relief for which a higher stamp is chargeable—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—The defendant was in possession of the estate of a deceased gosavi as his shishya (spiritual son). The plaintiff sued upon a stamp of Rs 10 for a declaration that he was the true shishya of the said gosavi by a previous adoption, his real object being to establish a title to the estate in the hands of the defendant. Held that, under the circumstances, the Court would not exercise, in the plaintiff's favour, the discretionary power to grant a declaratory decree vested in it by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), inasmuch as to do so would enable the plaintiff to obtain a relief on a stamp of Rs 10 which the Legislature intended should be chargeable with a higher fee, and thus would have the effect of giving countenance to an evasion of the stamp law. GANPATGIR BHOLAGIR v. GANPATGIR
[I. L. R., 8 Bom., 280]

185. ———— Suit to declare illegal proceedings removing person from office—
Want of actual ouster—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Suit by six plaintiffs praying for a declaration that certain proceedings of a District Temple Committee removing them from office as trustees of a temple were illegal. Defendants pleaded that the suit would not lie, because further relief might have been sought. Held that, unless there had been an actual ouster from office, a declaratory suit would lie. RAMANUJA v. DEVANAYAKA
[I. L. R., 8 Mad., 361]

186. ———— Right to appoint ghatwal
—Infringement of right of Government.—In a suit by the Government in which the plaintiff claimed the right "to reinstate a ghatwal in possession of a certain estate as being a ghatwali tenure liable to be appropriated to the use of the ghatwal for the time being, by setting aside a patni talukh collusively created by the defendants," it was found that no right of the Government had been infringed by the creation of such patni talukh, which the defendant had a right to make, and the Government was held not to be entitled to a bare declaration of right. ANAND KUMARI v. GOVERNMENT

187. — Suit for declaration of right to damages.—Quere—Whether claim for declaration of right to damages is one that is maintainable. KESHAB LALL v. GOBINDRAM. 4 N. W., 70

188. — Suit for declaration of right to flow of water.—Omission to specify damages.—A suit for a declaration of prescriptive right to the use and enjoyment of the water of a watercourse can be maintained without the specification of any particular amount of damage sustained by the plaintiff. The general rule of law in a case of this description is that, although proprietors of an estate through which a watercourse passes have the right to make use of the water for irrigating purposes, they must do so only to such extent as will not interfere with similar rights possessed by parties holding land lower down on the same watercourse. HARDWAN v. HURBUN SINGH. 11 W. R., 264

189. — Suit for declaration of right to maintenance.—Raising issues not raised by pleadings.—In a suit by a Hindu widow for a declaration of her right to maintenance out of her husband's estate, which had been mortgaged to the defendant by the heir, the plaintiff prayed "that the rights of the plaintiff over the estate of her husband by way of maintenance, and for the expenses attendant on the marriage of her daughters, might be ascertained and declared; that it might be declared that the defendant took the mortgage subject to the plaintiff's right to maintenance and right to such expenses as aforesaid; that for such purpose all proper accounts might be taken; for an injunction; and such further or other relief as might be necessary. No specific sum was asked for maintenance, nor was it stated on what portion of the estate the maintenance was sought to be charged, nor that the defendant took with notice of the plaintiff's assertion of her rights. The lower Court held that the suit ought to be dismissed as praying only for a declaration of right. No alteration in the form of the suit or in the issues in this respect was proposed for the plaintiff. Held on appeal that the Judge ought not to have dismissed the suit, but to have framed issues for the purpose of determining what should be allowed for the maintenance of the plaintiff and the expenses of the marriages, if the plaintiff should be found entitled to them. NINTARINI DAS v. MAXHARAL DUTT

190. — Suit for declaration that decree is fraudulent and collusive.—Specific Relief Act, 1877, s. 42—Suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud.—Subsequently to a decree for partition of an ancestral estate, the creditors of one of the parties thereto, who, from the time of the suit, had borrowed money from them on the security of his rights and interests in the estate, brought a suit against their debtor, and obtained a decree for the moneys due to them. They then sued all the parties to the partition for a declaration that the decree then passed was, so far as it affected their (the plaintiffs') interests, fraudulent and collusive, and of no effect. Held that the suit was not maintainable. RAM SARUP v. BUDHIN KUAN

(I. L. R., 7 All., 684)

191. — Suit for declaration of right to an account.—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Where it is open to the plaintiff to ask for an account, against the defendant, of moneys received by him under a certificate of heirship, and for payment of moneys not properly accounted for, he is precluded by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, from asking for a mere declaratory decree. BAI ANOPE v. MULCHAND GIRDHAR

(I. L. R., 9 Bom., 255)

192. — Suit by landholder for declaration of right to take land from occupancy-tenant for cultivation of indigo.—Wajib-ul-urs—Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act), s. 42.—The mamindars of a village sued an occupancy-tenant for a declaration of their right to maintain a custom which was thus recorded in the wajib-ul-urs—"when necessary, one or two bighas out of the tenants' lands are taken with their consent (ba khushi) for sowing indigo." Upon the basis of this entry, they claimed to be entitled to take a portion of the occupancy-holding at a certain period of the year for the purpose of cultivating indigo. Held by the Full Bench that the word "khushi" used in the wajib-ul-urs indicated that the land was only to be taken with the occupancy-tenant's consent, and the document created no right of the nature alleged, namely, to take the land despite the tenant. Per TYRELL, J.—That the suit was not maintainable under the special provisions of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). SHROBARN v. BHAIRO PRASAD. I. L. R., 7 All., 880

193. — Suit for declaration that property is wuqf.—Act XX of 1863, ss. 14, 15, 18—Civil Procedure Code, s. 539—Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act), s. 42.—A Mahomedan brought a suit against a person in possession of certain property for a declaration that the property was wuqf. He did not allege himself to be interested in the property, further or otherwise than as being a Mahomedan. He stated as his cause of action that the defendant had, in a former suit between the same parties, filed a written statement, in which he denied that the property now in question was wuqf. Held that the suit was not maintainable under the provisions of s. 42 of Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act). Held, further, that the relief contemplated by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act being always a matter of the Court's discretion, and inasmuch as the evidence adduced by the plaintiff himself showed that the defendant was using the property for charitable purposes, it would not be proper to make the declaration prayed for by the plaintiff, even if the suit was maintainable. WAJIB ALI SHAH v. The remedy would appear to be by way of injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree. KUNHAMED v. KUTTI
[I. L. R., 14 Mad., 167]

185. ——— Suit for declaration that the defendant is a mere benamidar for plaintiff—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—In a suit by A to obtain a declaration that a decree originally obtained by B against C and another, which had been purchased in the name of D, had really been purchased by the plaintiff for his own benefit,—Held that, inasmuch as it was not necessary to ask for an injunction, the suit was not barred by the proviso to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. GOUD MOHUN GOULI v. DECREE—continued.1. FORM OF DECREE.*(a) GENERAL CASES.

1. —Necessity for a decree—Act XIX of 1873 (N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act), ss. 113, 114, 115—Omission to frame decree in case in which a question of title is decided—Second appeal.—It is essential that in a suit under the Civil Procedure Code a decree should be drawn up. Held, therefore, that in a proceeding under s. 113 of the North-West Provinces Land Revenue Act, where the rights of the parties are decided, a decree should be drawn up giving effect to the decision. An Assistant Collector passed a decision under s. 113 declaring the rights of the parties, but did not draw up a decree giving effect to such decision. There was an appeal to the District Court from such decision, which made a decree affirming it. Held by STUART, C.J., on second appeal, that the defect arising from the want of a decree on the record of the Court of first instance was a bar to the hearing of the second appeal, and the proceedings of the District Court should be set aside, and the case should be sent back to the Assistant Collector in order that he might frame a decree. Held by STRAIGHT, J., that the decree of the District Court was appealable, such defect notwithstanding, and the appeal should be decreed, and the decree of the District Court reversed, and the case be sent back to the Assistant Collector for the purpose aforesaid. Observations by STUART, C.J., on the absence in the Code of Civil Procedure of any mandatory provisions in reference to the framing of decrees. RANJIT SINGH v. ILAHI BAKSH

An appeal by the plaintiff was entertained by the Subordinate Judge, who passed a decree for specific performance, and decreed that, if the deficient Court-fees were paid, possession should be given to the plaintiff, but that, on failure to pay the Court-fees, the claim for possession should be dismissed. Held that, the plaintiff not having in the first instance paid the full Court-fees, he should have been called upon by the Munsif to do so. As this was not done, the Court of

9. —Omission to specify boundaries in decree for land—Specific statement of relief granted by decree.—A claimed certain lands, claiming one portion of such lands under one title and the remainder under another and separate title. In the schedule to his plaint he gave the boundaries of the entire lands claimed by him, but did not give any boundary between the lands claimed by him under one title and the lands claimed by him under the other title. The lower Court decreed the whole of the plaintiff's claim. The lower Appellate

12. — Refund of purchase-money—Decree on appeal.—In reversing a decree on appeal, the Court should state the relief which they consider the appellant entitled to. A purchased a Government revenue-paying estate from B, but on going to take possession he found C, who claimed under a patni grant, also from B, in possession. A case was, therefore, instituted by B under Act IV of 1840, but it was ordered that C should be retained in possession. A then brought a suit against B and C to recover his purchase-money. No relief was asked against C, nor had C anything to do with the sale from B to A. The suit was dismissed. On appeal it was ordered merely "that the decree be reversed and the appeal decreed with costs." Nothing was asked against C in the grounds of appeal. In execution of this decree, C's property was seized and sold. C petitioned the Principal Sudder Ameen, who held that he was not liable, but on appeal the Judge held that he was liable for the purchase-money, and his property had been rightly sold in execution for it. Held, on special appeal, that C was not liable to refund the purchase-money. BELL v. Appellate Court directed the defendants exonerated by the first Court to be added as respondents, set aside the decree against the appealing defendant, and passed a decree against the defendants, who were added as respondents, as representatives of one S, and ordered the amount so decreed to be recovered from the estate of her (S's) husband. On appeal to the High Court by the defendants, who were thus made liable, on the ground that the liability to contribution being the personal liability of S, they not being heirs to her stridhan, they were not liable for the plaintiff's claim.—Held that, inasmuch as a claim for contribution creates only a personal liability against the co-sharers on account of whose share the payment has been made, and does not create a charge on the estate, the persons liable would not be the reversionary heirs to S's husband's estates, but those who would inherit her stridhan. UPENDRA LAL MUKERJEE v. (m) ENDOWMENT.

51. — Suit to set aside sale of property belonging to religious endowment—Re-payment of money.—In a suit to set aside the sale of property belonging to a religious endowment the Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree in favour of his reversionary rights, declaring that the conveyance should not operate adversely to him to the extent of such portion as was sold to meet pressing debts and necessities of the muth. Held that such a decree was erroneous, as the transaction of sale was one and indivisible. If the sale was valid, the plaintiff was not entitled to have it set aside to any extent; but if the conveyance was not operative against the plaintiff, it should have been set aside in its entirety, either absolutely or upon condition that the plaintiff should repay such portion of the consideration money as had been rightly advanced. JOY LALL TEWARI v. GOSSAIN BROODUN GEEK

52. — Charitable trust, Scheme for management of account—Matters to be considered in framing scheme.—The plaintiffs sued as persons interested in the maintenance of a religious and charitable institution, and prayed that the defendants, as recipients of the offerings at the idol's shrine, should be made accountable as trustees for the right disposal of the property thus acquired. They also prayed for an account, a receiver, for the removal of the shewaks, the defendants, from their office, and for the settlement of a scheme for future management. The High Court directed the District Judge (1) to take steps either by appointing a receiver, or otherwise, in his discretion, for guarding the property of the temple; (2) to take an account of the property and of the receipts and disbursements of the temple; (3) to make the requisite orders for recovering property appropriated by the shewaks; and (4) to draw up a scheme for the future management of the temple and its funds, regard being had to the established practice of the institution and to the position of the shewaks and of other persons connected with it. Held that the decree was right, no further direction being necessary, and the first thing to be done being to take an account of the trust property. *CHOTALAL LAKHIRAM v. 54. — Act X of 1859, s. 18—Defective decree.—In a suit for a kabuliat at enhanced rates to correspond with the terms of a pottah which had been tendered at some date preceding the suit, where the lower Court decreed the plaintiff's appeal, Held that the decree was defective, inasmuch as it did not declare what the kabuliat was to which the plaintiff was entitled, and that the claim of the plaintiff could not succeed, inasmuch as it demanded a higher rate for a period which had already elapsed when the suit was instituted, a right forbidden by s. 13, Act X of 1859, without giving such notice as therein prescribed, which notice the plaintiff had failed to give in this case. *ZINNUT BIKSH v. 55. — Parties, Non-joinder of—Suit barred as to added parties.—In a suit for the recovery of rent at an enhanced rate, brought by two of four brothers, joint and undivided owners of the tenure, the other two brothers, on an objection taken by the defendant that they ought to have been parties to the suit, presented a petition signifying their assent to the institution of the suit, and were thereupon treated as parties to the suit. This application was, however, made after the period of limitation prescribed for such a suit had expired. Held by MARKBY, J., that although the rights of such added parties were absolutely barred, yet the Court could proceed to adjudicate upon, and declare the rights of, the remaining plaintiffs who had originally filed the suit, and that, as the claim for rent was indivisible, the decree in their favour should be for the whole amount. *BORDONATE HAGE v. 56. ——— Goods—Suit to recover specific goods in hands of third parties—Alternative claim for value as compensation—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 10, 11.—In execution of a decree obtained by the defendants against one M in the Court of Small Causes, certain goods were attached, to which plaintiff preferred a claim. That claim being disallowed, plaintiff filed, in the City Civil Court, Madras, a suit for and obtained a declaration of his title to the goods, but prior to the date of the decree, namely, in October 1895, the goods attached had been sold by the Court of Small Causes, and certain third parties had become purchasers thereof. On plaintiff, in December 1897, suing "for the recovery of the goods or their value as compensation,"—Held that, the goods not being in the possession or under the control of the defendants, plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for their recovery in specie; and that plaintiff's only remedy was by way of damages for the wrongful taking of his goods at the instance of the defendants. MURUGESA MUDALI v. 58. ——— Heir of deceased obligor, Suit on bond against—Specification of mode of realization.—A decree in a suit upon a bond, against the heir of the deceased obligor, awarded to the plaintiff the amount of the bond from the property of the obligor, and directed that "the defendant be released from the claim in this suit." An order for execution of the decree was set aside by the Principal Sudder Ameen, on the ground that the decree did not warrant the issue of an attachment, since it was not against any person. Held that the decree was informal in not expressing that the debt was to be realized out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the heir, or that should come to the hands of the heir, but that the Principal Sudder Ameen had jurisdiction to amend and ought to have amended the decree in this respect. ANUND ROY v. (r) IDOL.

61. ——— Suit respecting idol whose temple has been destroyed—Turn of worship—Removal and re-conveyance of idol.—In a suit respecting an idol which had been set up by the common ancestor of the parties, but whose temple had been destroyed by the erosion of the river, the plaintiffs asked for a declaration of their right to remove the idol to their own house and to keep it there for the period of their turn of worship. Held that in giving the plaintiffs a declaratory decree the Court should define the precise period for which the plaintiffs were entitled to worship the idol deducting any period for which the defendants had a joint claim, and should also make provision in the decree for the re-conveyance of the idol to the place where it was at the plaintiff's expense and before the expiration of their turn of worship, so as to allow the other parties the full benefit of their turns. RAM SOONDAR THAKOOR v. DECREE—continued.1. FORM OF DECREE—continued.

65. ——— Suit for recovery of possession of property on which Hindu widow has a claim for maintenance.—Order as to maintenance.—Where the nearest relative of a Hindu widow sued for recovery of property in her possession, and the lower Appellate Court awarded the claim without fixing the amount of maintenance to be given to the widow, the High Court remanded the suit in order that the amount of maintenance might be fixed, notwithstanding that the widow claimed maintenance in that Court for the first time. BARABAI KUM BANGUJI v. SADU HIN BHAVANI

[8 Bom., A. C., 66]

66. ——— Decree for contingent arrears of maintenance.—Non-payment of arrears.—A prospective decree for contingent arrears of maintenance is quite irregular. The non-payment of any arrear due would be a fresh cause of action constituting a basis for a suit. JULEMA CHITTA KOOKER v. BHAGER KOKR . . . 6 N. W., 41

67. ——— Decree declaring right to maintenance, and directing payment of arrears.—Order for future payments.—Where the Civil Court, upon the suit of a Hindu widow for maintenance, makes a decree containing an order in express terms to the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the amount claimed by her for maintenance during a past period, but as to the future merely declares her right to receive maintenance at an annual rate from the defendant, the proper way of enforcing the right thus declared is not by executing the decree, but by bringing a fresh suit. Decrees declaring a right to maintenance and directing payment of arrears should contain an order directing payment of future maintenance. VISHNU SHANKHOG v. MANJAMMA

[I. L. R., 9 Bom., 108]

68. ——— Cash allowance.—Decree for future payment of share.—The plaintiff in this suit sought to recover eleven years' arrears of his share in a certain Government allowance received by the defendants, and also prayed for an order directing the defendants to pay him and his heirs his proper share in future. The Court passed a decree for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, and also directed that the defendants should pay to the plaintiff and his heirs for the future his share in the allowance. Held also that the order in the decree as to payment in future was bad. It could not be executed, as the amount of the allowance was variable, and the defendants were not liable until they obtained payment of the allowance from Government. CHAMANLAL v. BAPURHAI

69. ——— Declaration of mother's right to maintenance where whole estate goes to adopted son.—Suit to establish adoption and recover property.—The High Court, being impressed with the propriety of not allowing the adopted son to recover the whole property from the widow, his adoptive mother, until proper provision had been made for her maintenance, added a declaration to the decree made in his favour that he do take the property awarded to him, subject to the obligation to

70. ——— Suit by heir to recover family property from widow.—Provision for widow.—The Court will not allow the heir to recover family property from a widow entitled to be maintained out of it without first securing a proper maintenance for her. Jamnabai v. Raychand Narai Chand, I. L. R., 7 Bom., 225, followed. YETIWA v. BHIMANAGUDA . . . I. L. R., 18 Bom., 463

71. ——— Maintenance, mother's right to.—Right to possession in virtue of claim to maintenance—Mortgagee's right to possession, subject to mother's claim to maintenance.—After the death of S, who had mortgaged certain land belonging to him, his widow (defendant No. 2) mortgaged it again in consideration of the existing mortgage debt and a further advance. The mortgage was afterwards assigned to the plaintiff, who sued the widow (defendant No. 2) and the mother (defendant No. 1) of S for possession. The mother (defendant No. 1) contended that any right the widow (defendant No. 2) had to mortgage the property was subject to her (the first defendant's) right to maintenance out of it, and, as her maintenance, she claimed to remain in possession. The lower Court held that the property should not be given to the plaintiff until a proper arrangement had been made by him for the maintenance of defendant No. 1, but stated that it imposed that condition on the supposition that there was no other family property out of which she could be maintained. Held that the decree was wrong in making the right of the first defendant to remain in possession dependent on there being no other property. Further that, as the mortgagees lent their money with full knowledge of the first defendant's possession in virtue of her claim to maintenance, the first defendant ought not to be compelled to accept from the plaintiff maintenance in some other form. RACHAWA v. SRIVATOGAPPA

72. ——— Decree for maintenance.—Suit for altering the rate of maintenance fixed by a decree.—A suit will lie to obtain a reduction in the amount of maintenance decreed to a Hindu widow on a change of circumstances, such as a permanent deterioration in the value of the family property. But where such deterioration is due to the plaintiff's own default in not keeping the property in a proper state of repair, he has no right to ask for a reduction. Per PARSONS, J.—Courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require, and in such cases the remedy would be the

73. ———— Decree for maintenance where it is charged on property—Receiver, Appointment of, in case of default—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 67, 99, 100.—To avoid any difficulty in executing a decree for maintenance out of property charged with payment of the allowance and make a fresh suit unnecessary in case of default in payment of the instalments, a receiver should be appointed under the decree itself with directions, in case of default in payment of the maintenance, to take possession of the estate and sell the same and out of the sale-proceeds to pay the allowance for maintenance. HEMANGINIE DASSEE v. KUMODE CHANDER DASS I. L. R., 26 Cal., 441 [3 C. W. N., 139]

74. ———— Maintenance of mother and marriageable daughters—Provision for maintenance of daughter ceasing on marriage.—A Hindu widow, with her two daughters as co-plaintiffs, sued the son of her deceased husband by another wife, alleging that he was in possession of his father's property, for maintenance and for the marriage expenses of the daughters, both of whom were of marriageable age. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiffs a decree for a monthly allowance and Rs 540 to the widow as arrears of maintenance and Rs 1,000 for the marriage expenses of the daughters. Held that the Court of first instance should have separated the maintenance to which it considered the three plaintiffs respectively entitled, and that, as to the two minor plaintiffs, it should have declared that such maintenance should cease upon their marriage. TULSHA v. 76. ———— Mesne profits, Decree for, after partition of zamindari.—A question of the partibility of a zamindari disputed in a family of six brothers having been decided in favour of three who sued for their shares, Held that the decree should be that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover one-half of the zamindari, together with the mesne profits thereon, from the time of their dispossession; provided that they should recover such mesne profits for a period of no more than three years next before the commencement of the suit, subject to an allowance to the defendants for all or any portion of such mesne profits which the latter might prove to have been duly applied for the benefit of the joint family. APPA BAO v. DECREE—continued.1. FORM OF DECREE—continued.*(w) MORTGAGE.

77. ———— Suit on money-bond—Charge on land—Specification of property from which money may be realized.—In decreeing a claim founded on a simple money-bond, a Court has no authority to direct the realization of the money out of any named property, and thus make it a charge upon such property. In such a case, if the decree does this, and the property is sold before attachment, the title conveyed by the sale is not affected (as there is no charge upon this property before it is attached) and the decree-holder's remedy lies against the judgment-debtor. OMBITO LALL SINGAR v. RAMDHIN CHAKR . . . 18 W. R., 508

78. ———— Decree against mortgagor—Mode of execution.—Where a decree is against the mortgagor generally, coupled with a declaration of the lien, the decree-holder may proceed either against the person and his property or against the mortgaged property, though whether such a course will be allowed in any particular case is a matter for the discretion of the Court executing the decree. LUCHMI DAI KOORI v. ASMAN SING

79. ———— Money-decree in suit for foreclosure or sale.—A mortgagee sued for foreclosure or sale in the usual form. The suit was undefended. The plaintiff elected to take a simple money-decree against the mortgagor. The following words were appended to the decree: "Note.—The equity of redemption in the property comprised in the mortgage is not liable to attachment and sale under this decree." After ineffectual attempts to realize his debt, the plaintiff applied to the Court for liberty to sell the mortgaged premises. Held that the Court had a discretionary power to grant or refuse the sale. The note at the end of the decree did not amount to an absolute prohibition against the sale, but was merely meant as a guide to the Court which should have to execute the decree, and to show that execution should not issue against the equity of redemption, except by special leave of the Court. The Court made an order as if there had been a decree for sale in the first instance, except that the account was to be treated as a final account at the date of the decree. NBERNJEEN MOOKERJEE v. DECREE—continued.1. FORM OF DECREE—continued.

82. — Suit by mortgagee against the mortgagor and purchasers of the mortgaged property.—In execution of a decree, the right, title, and interest in two parcels of property of a judgment-debtor, who had previous to the attachment executed a simple mortgage thereof to A, was sold; and B and C respectively purchased them at different prices. A sued the mortgagor and the purchasers B and C for enforcing his lien on the two parcels of property. The suit was dismissed by the first Court, but on appeal the order was "appeal decreed." A entered into a compromise with B, and entered satisfaction of a moiety of the decree. He afterwards issued execution of the other moiety against C, and compelled him to pay. C now sued B for recovery of the proportion of the amount paid by him to A, but which, according to the valuation of the respective properties, should have fallen into the share of B. Held that the proper decree in the suit of A against the mortgagor and B and C would have been a money-decree against the mortgagor only, with a declaration that the two properties were liable to be sold, clear of subsequent incumbrances, in satisfaction of the mortgage-bond debt. *BHAIRAB CHANDRA MADAK v. 84. — Redemption, suit for.—Sub-mortgage—Accounts taken between mortgagee and sub-mortgagee.—In a suit for the redemption of land which has been sub-mortgaged by the mortgagee, in which suit the sub-mortgagees are co-defendants, the mortgagee is entitled to have an account taken of the sub-mortgage. The judgment should direct an account of what is due to the original mortgagee and then of what is due to the sub-mortgagee; and that upon payment to the latter of the sum due to him, not exceeding the sum found due to the original mortgagee, and on payment of the residue, if any, of what is due to the original mortgagee, both shall reconvey to the mortgagor. *NARAYAN VINAYAL MAVAL v. 85. — Rights and liabilities of prior and subsequent mortgagees.—Suit by second mortgagee—Right of redemption.—S mortgaged a house and site to R on the 4th January 1870, and on the 21st February 1870 he (S) mortgaged the same property to D. On the 3rd January 1874 R brought a suit against S on the mortgage and obtained a decree, which directed the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt by the sale of the mortgaged property. R did not make D a party to that suit. The property was sold by the Court and purchased by N in his own name, but as trustee for R. At the Court sale, D, the puisne mortgagee, gave notice of his claim to R and N. D sued R, R, and S for the amount due on his mortgage. In his evidence R admitted that he, subsequently to the sale to N, pulled down the house and sold portion of the materials. The lower Courts dismissed the suit, holding that N (defendant No. 1), the purchaser at the auction sale, was not liable for the plaintiff's claim. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that D, being puisne mortgagee and as such representing the equity of redemption to the extent of his mortgage, should have had an opportunity of redeeming the mortgaged premises from R's mortgage, and should have been made a party to R's suit. He could not be deprived of his right by proceedings to which he was not a party, and was, therefore, entitled to a decree framed on the basis of such right of redemption. DANODAR DEVCHAND v. NARO MAHADEV

86. — First and second mortgages.—Second mortgagee not made party to suit by first mortgagee for sale of mortgaged property—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 85—Notice.—Certain immovable property was mortgaged in 1866 to H, in 1871 to G, and in 1873 again to H. In 1868 the property was purchased by M, the representative of G, in execution of a decree obtained in 1877 by G in a suit for sale brought by him upon the mortgage of 1871. To this suit and decree the mortgagee under the deeds of 1866 and 1873 was not a party. In 1886 M sued the representatives of H for redemption of the mortgage of 1866. One of the defendants pleaded that, as he was a puisne incumbrancer in the property in suit at the time of the plaintiff's suit against the mortgagors in 1877, he ought to have been made a party to that suit, and thus afforded "an opportunity of protecting his rights by payment of the mortgage-money." He did not in the Court below ask in express terms to be allowed to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage, but he did so in appeal to the High Court. Held, with reference to the terms of s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, that inasmuch as the defendant was in possession of the mortgaged property at the time of the suit of 1877, and his mortgage was a registered instrument, it must be presumed that the plaintiff had notice of its existence, and should, therefore, have made him a party; and that, under the circumstances, he should be placed in the same position as he would have held if the decree of 1877 had never been passed. Held also that, although it would have been more regular had the defendant in the Court below asked in express terms to be allowed to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage and brought into Court what he alleged to be due thereunder, or expressed his willingness to pay such amount as might be found to be due on taking accounts, yet the defendant having pleaded that he ought to have been afforded an opportunity of protecting his rights by payment of the prior mortgage-money, the Court should not be too technical in such a matter, where the defendant had the undoubted right now asserted by him, and where the result of not recognizing such right would be to extinguish his security. The Court, therefore, passed an order declaring the defendant entitled to retain possession of the property in suit, if within ninety days he paid into Court the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage-debt, with interest, otherwise the lower Court's decree for redemption on payment of the amount due on the mortgage of 1865 would stand. MURAHMAD SAMI-EDDIN v. MAN SINGH. I. L. R., 9 All., 125

67. Unnecessary declaration—Costs.—A mortgagee holding two mortgages of the same property sold, under the second mortgage, to the plaintiff, and subsequently under the first mortgage to his son, benami for himself. Held, in a suit against the mortgagee and the benamidars, that the plaintiff was entitled to set aside this second sale and to redeem, but that, the mortgagor not being a party, the Court was wrong in introducing into the decree a declaration to the effect that the plaintiff was entitled "as second mortgagee," and had not acquired the equity of redemption belonging to the mortgagor. Such a declaration should in appeal be struck out as embarrassing to the plaintiff's title at the expense of the respondent who resisted. CHOOHAMUN SINGH v. MAHOMED ALI

[I. L. R., 9 I. A., 21]

68. Condition in decree.—In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, Held, with reference to the last paragraph of s. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the Courts below were wrong in subjecting their decrees in favour of the plaintiff to the condition that the defendant should not be evicted till the crops he had sown were cut. DEO DAT v. RAM AUTAR. I. L. R., 8 All., 502

69. Redemption of usufructuary mortgage—Conditional decree for possession.—In a suit to recover possession of certain lands founded on the allegation that the defendants had obtained possession of them from the plaintiffs as usufructuary mortgagees, and that the mortgage debt had been satisfied from the usufruct of the lands, the lower Court, although it found that the mortgage-debt had not been satisfied as alleged, gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession conditional on the payment of the balance of the mortgage-debt. Held that, inasmuch as the defendants never rendered any accounts, and inasmuch as no agreement had been made between the parties as to the amount at which the profits of the land should be estimated it was impossible for the plaintiffs to have ascertained before suit what sum, if any, was due by them, and seeing that, whether such decree was altered or not, the plaintiffs might immediately pay the balance of the mortgage-debt and demand possession, it was unnecessary to interfere with such decree. ZADAN v. PARNESHAR DAS. I. L. R., 1 All., 524

70. Conditional decree for redemption.—A conditional decree fixing a period for payment of money found to be due on mortgage-bonds entitling the mortgagor to redemption, though not claimable as of right by the mortgagor, who ordinarily should be ready at once with his money, is a proper and judicious order passed by an Appellate Court, where the Court of first instance determined the amount payable under the mortgage,

92. Suit for sale of mortgaged property without redeeming prior mortgages—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58.—In a suit on a mortgage by a subsequent mortgagee who made prior mortgagees parties thereto, and in which the plaintiff prayed that the amount due to him might be realized by sale of the mortgaged property, the lower Court decreed the suit, but required the plaintiff, before bringing the property to sale, to redeem certain prior mortgages. Held, on appeal, that although, on the authority of the case of Kantiram v. Kutubuddin Mahomed, I. L. R., 22 Cal., 88, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree giving him leave to sell the property subject to the prior incumbrances, yet, having regard to the difficulty and complication that would arise under such decree by reason of the fact that one of the defendants, who had purchased the equity of redemption and certain prior mortgages, had obtained upon two of them decrees against the plaintiff, the decree passed by the lower Court was equitable and proper. BANI MADHUB MOHAPATRA v. SOURENDRA MOHUN TAGORE [I. L. R., 23 Cal., 796]

93. Mortgage sued on inadmissible in evidence for want of registration—Secondary evidence—Mortgage effecting consolidation of prior mortgages—Decree to redeem prior mortgages.—In a suit to redeem a mortgage of 1867 which had been lost and admittedly had not been registered, it appeared that it had been executed in consolidation of two prior mortgages, dated 1856 and 1860, respectively. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree on the footing of the unregistered mortgage which could not be proved, but that he was entitled to redeem the two previous mortgages if they were found to be genuine and valid. ARUMUGAM PILLAI v. 85. ———— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 86, 88—Decree for sale—Provision for interest at contract rate until six months from date of decree.—Defendants promised to pay plaintiffs a sum of money for value received, with interest thereon from the date of the promise until demand at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and after demand at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum until payment in full, and as further security for such re-payment deposited with plaintiffs the title-deeds of certain immoveable property. Demand was made, but was not complied with, whereupon plaintiffs informed defendants by letter that their account carried interest at the higher rate provided for in the promissory note. Plaintiffs now sued for the amount due in respect of principal and interest at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum from the date of their letter till payment, and asked that, in default of payment on a day to be fixed by the Court, the property might be sold. A decree having been passed in plaintiffs' favour, provision was made therein ordering defendants to pay the amount of principal and interest due at the date of the decree, with interest thereon at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum from that date to a date six months thereafter. Objection having been taken to the form of this decree on the ground that payment of interest at the contract rate was only provided for up to the termination of six months from the date of decree, instead of till payment, — Held that the decree was correctly drawn. In principle there is no difference between a mortgage decree which has become absolute and ordinary decree for money. After the day fixed for payment, or on the passing of the decree, as the case may be, the rights of the parties under the contract become merged in the decree, and afterwards there is no more reason for giving interest at the contract rate in the one case than in the other. *Rameswar Koer v. 86. ———— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 1, 67, 86-89—Usufructuary mortgage, dated 20th April 1882, sued on in 1884.—In a suit filed in 1884 on a usufructuary mortgage, dated 20th April 1882, a decree was passed for the payment of the mortgage-money, or in default for the sale of the mortgage property. Held (semble under the Transfer of Property Act) that the decree for sale was the right decree. *VENKATASAMI v. 87. ———— Construction of mortgage-bond—Liability of property other than that mortgaged.—Under a mortgage-bond, a mortgagor stipulated that, if the money advanced should not be repaid at a fixed date, the mortgaged property might be sold; and that, if the property were sold for arrears of Government revenue or for other causes, the mortgagee might, in such cases, recover the money advanced by execution against the person or other property of the mortgagor. Held, no sale having taken

88. ———— First and second mortgages—Suit by second mortgagee for sale—Plaint denying or ignoring title of first mortgagee.—Where a second mortgagee, coming into Court and denying or ignoring the title of a prior mortgagee, asks to have the property sold as if there were no prior incumbrance, the suit should be dismissed, and should not be decreed with words of limitation reserving the rights of the prior mortgagee. *Roghnath Prasad v. 89. ———— Suit by second mortgagee against purchaser of equity of redemption who had paid off a prior mortgage—Suit ignoring lien of purchaser of equity of redemption.—One A S purchased the equity of redemption of a property subject to two mortgages, and as part of the transaction paid off the prior mortgage. The mortgagees under the second mortgage sued to bring the mortgage property to sale, making the original mortgagor and the purchaser of the equity of redemption defendants, but omitting any mention of the lien acquired by such purchaser. Held that such omission was not a valid reason for dismissing the plaintiff's suit altogether. *Salig Ram v. 102. ———— Suit by puisne incumbrancer—Decree for sale.—In March 1881, A purchased certain land, and in the same month mortgaged it to B. In June, the land was attached in execution of a decree. In August, A discharged the judgment-debt with money borrowed from C, and he hypothecated the land to him to secure repayment of the loan. In 1882, B brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree, in execution of which the land was brought to sale and purchased by him: C was not a party to this suit. In 1886, B sold the land to D under an instrument, which recited that out of the purchase-money Rs 700 were retained by the purchaser for payment of prior incumbrances, and the finding was that the purchaser undertook to pay the debt owing to C. C now used A and D to enforce his hypothecation. Held that C was entitled to a decree for sale. NARAYANASAMI NAIDU v. NARAYANA RAO I. L. R., 17 Mad., 62

103. ———— Suit on mortgage for an account and for sale of mortgaged property—Practice—Decree where puisne mortgagee is a party defendant and asks for an account on the footing of his mortgage—Application to vary decree.—In a suit on a mortgage, for an account and for sale of the mortgaged property, where a puisne mortgagee who is made a defendant appears and proves his mortgage and asks that the decree sought to be obtained by the plaintiff may also provide for an account on the footing of his mortgage, and for payment of the amount found due to him out of the sale-proceeds, the practice of the Court is, where no issue is raised as between the defendants and no question of priority arises, on proof of the subsequent mortgage, to make a decree directing an account on the footing of each of the mortgages, and fixing one period of redemption for all the defendants. Ashindro Bhooma Chatterjee v. Channoo Lall Joharry, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 101, referred to. An application made by the purchaser of the equity of redemption, who had been made a defendant in such a suit and had been served with a summons, but had failed to appear, that the decree which had been made in accordance with the above practice should be varied by limiting it to a decree in favour of the plaintiff alone, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction in such a suit to make a decree between co-defendants, was dismissed. RISABY MORUN ROY v. 104. ———— Mortgagee by mortgagee of his rights as such, but without assignment—Rights of sub-mortgagee as against original mortgagee.—E and others mortgaged certain immovable property to N K. N K made a sub-mortgage to C L purporting to mortgage to him his rights as mortgagee, but without assigning his mortgage to C L. Upon this title C L sued for sale of the property mortgaged by E and others to N K. Held that C L was not entitled to bring the property mortgaged to N K to sale, but at most to obtain a decree for money against N K, in execution of which he might possibly have attached, if it had not been paid off, the mortgage held by N K. GANGA PRASAD v. 105. ———— Prior and subsequent incumbrances—Right of subsequent mortgagee to redeem prior mortgage—Manner in which subsequent mortgagee's right of redemption is effected by partial destruction of the prior mortgage—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 74.—One M R was a co-mortgagee under mortgages of the years 1867, 1868, and 1870, of a village called Ahak and shares in certain other villages, Surajpur, Raipur, Bamoti, and Khara Buzurg. K D, the plaintiff, was the representative of a subsequent mortgagee of the share in Khara Buzurg. K D in 1874 brought the share comprised in his mortgage to sale, and purchased it himself; but without making M R or his representatives parties to his suit for sale. Subsequently, in 1879, M R sued for a decree for sale of all the property mentioned above, but the decree which he obtained was limited to the village Ahak and the share in Khara Buzurg. K D was not made a party to this suit. In 1882, one M M A purchased the share in Surajpur, which had been subject to the mortgage sued upon by M R in 1879, but had been exempted from the decree obtained by M R in 1879. In 1893 K D sued for redemption of M R's prior mortgage of 1867 and for a declaration of his right upon such redemption to bring to sale the property comprised in the mortgage. Held that, inasmuch as M R's interest in the mortgaged property had been limited by the decree of 1879 to the village of Ahak and the share in Khara Buzurg, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for the sale of the share purchased by M M A in Surajpur. MUHAMMAD MAHMUD ALI v. B sued on his mortgage, and obtained a decree for sale without joining as defendant C, of whose mortgage he had notice; D, the son of the decree-holder, became the purchaser in execution and improved the land at a considerable cost. C now sued the sons and representatives of A and B (both deceased) on his mortgage, and sought a decree for sale. Held (1) that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for sale subject to the right of the representatives of B, if the purchaser did not elect to redeem; (2) that the purchaser was not entitled to allowances for improvements; (3) that the plaintiff was entitled to interest at the agreed rate to the date of decree. BANGAYYA CHETTIAR v. In 1892, the mortgagee sued to enforce his lien by sale of the mortgaged property. The Court passed a decree against the talukhdar personally, holding that it had no power under ss. 31 and 32 of the Gujarat Talukhdars Act to direct a sale of the talukhdari estate. Held, reversing the decree, that the mortgage, having been effected prior to the coming into force of the Gujarat Talukhdars Act, was not invalidated by cl. 1 of s. 31 of the Act, and that the Court was bound to pass a decree for sale in default of payment of the mortgage-debt. Quære—Whether the property could be sold without the sanction of the Governor in Council, regard being had to the provisions of cl. 3 of s. 31 of the Act. Nagar Pragi v. V of the Code, the decision must be set aside. Watson v. Collector of Rajshahi, 18 B. L. R., P. C., 49; 18 Moore's I. A., 160, and Kadrat v. Dinu, I. L. 111. ————— Suit to recover accounts and papers—Inquiry in execution.—In a suit to recover accounts and papers, instead of giving plaintiff a decree with a direction that it should be ascertained in execution what accounts and papers, if any, were in the hands of the defendant, the lower Appellate Court ought to have remanded the case to the first Court with instructions to frame a new issue to try what papers and accounts, if any, were in the hands of the defendant, and whether he had wrongfully refused or omitted to deliver them to plaintiff, and, if so, decide the case accordingly. JUGGER NATH PANDE v. The plaintiff obtained a decree in a partition suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court for his share in certain joint family property in the possession of the defendants (his co-parceners). The decree was affirmed on appeal. The defendants filed a second appeal in the High Court; but, before it was decided, one of the defendants died. The plaintiff at the hearing of the second appeal claimed a larger share in the family property than he had been awarded by the decrees of the Courts below. Held that he (plaintiff) was entitled to a share in that of the co-parcener who died pendente lite, and that the decree appealed from ought to be varied accordingly. SAKHARAM MAHADEV DANGE v. 117. ———— Suit for partition by a purchaser from a co-sharer.—Decree in such suit need not be for a general partition of the entire estate.—When a purchaser from a co-sharer in a joint family estate sues to have his share severed and given to him, the Court is not bound to force the members of the family into a partition of the whole estate. It is, no doubt, open for each and every co-sharer to ask to have his share divided off and allotted to him (in which case he would have to pay court-fees according to his share). But, in the absence of such a request, the Court is not bound to determine what is the share of each of the co-sharers, and to compel him to take that share by making a general partition. In such a case the High Court refused, in second appeal, to accede to the prayer of some of the co-sharers, who had not appeared in the Court of first instance, to have their shares divided off and allotted to them. MURARRAO v. 119. ———— Talukhdari estate—Decree of Pricy Council.—In a suit commenced in 1865 by a member of a joint family for the declaration of his rights in a talukhdari estate, partition not being claimed, the order of Her Majesty in Council (1879) directed that the talukhdar should cause and allow the villages forming the talukhdari estate and the proceeds thereof to be managed and applied according to the trust declared in favour of the family. The plaintiff in that suit afterwards obtained entry of his name as a co-sharer in the villages in the register kept under Act XVII of 1876, s. 56; and then brought the first of the present suits for his share upon partition, both in that estate as it stood in 1865, and also with the addition of villages since acquired out of profits, claiming an account against the talukhdari. The latter alleged, among other defences, that the talukhdari estate was impartible, and brought a cross-suit to establish this, and also that it was held by him according to the rule of primogeniture, the right of other members of the family being only to the profits. Held that, in regard to the order of Her Majesty above mentioned, which was applicable to an estate held subject to the law of the Mitakshara, the talukhdari estate could not be declared to be impartible; also that a declaration in the Judicial Commissioner's decrees that a member of the family entitled to a share upon partition should hold it as an under-proprietor under the talukhdar could not be allowed to stand. PINTHI PAL v. a portion of his dar-patni talukh, which was brought against several defendants, four other persons applied to be made defendants, on the ground that they were co-sharers with the defendants on the record in the property in dispute. The application was granted; the added defendants were found to be possessed of the share which they claimed; and on the proofs which they adduced, the plaintiff's claim was dismissed. The plaintiff's claim as against the original defendants, who made no opposition, was decreed in special appeal, on the ground that they should not have been made defendants, and that the plaintiff was not bound to prove his case against anybody else but the person against whom he had brought the suit. Held that, upon the one issue common to all the defendants, viz., whether the property claimed was in the plaintiff's talukh or in that of the defendants, the Court could only come to one consistent finding; and that on the finding of the facts in the Court below the suit should be dismissed against all the defendants. KALIPRASAD SINGH v. It having been found that the plaintiff was entitled to a small portion only of the share he claimed, it was held that he was not entitled in this suit to have a partition at all, but that, as his co-sharer was in collusion with the other defendant, the plaintiff was entitled to relief, by a decree awarding him joint possession with defendant No. 1 of the portion to which they were entitled. RUSTUM ALLY v. 128. — Suit by purchaser for possession of share of ancestral estate.—In a suit for possession of lands under purchase of a share in an ancestral estate, the Judge, in pronouncing a decree for the plaintiff, ought to declare specifically whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the share in an undivided estate, or specific lands as representing that share. RAMLOCHAN DAS v. 129. — Purchaser from one of several divided co-sharers—Suit for joint possession—Partition when unnecessary.—The property in dispute (consisting of 12 thikans or plots of land) was originally held by A and B as tenants-in-common, and they divided the income according to their respective shares. After A's death, his widow adopted C on condition that she was to remain in absolute possession and enjoyment for her life, and that C was to succeed to the estate after her death. The widow mortgaged 9 out of the 12 thikans, sold one, and granted a perpetual lease of another to the defendant. The defendant also purchased B's share in the thikans in dispute. The plaintiff purchased C's rights, and on the widow's death sued to set aside her alienations and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of all the thikans. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the widow's alienations were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's remedy was a partition suit. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to be put into joint possession with the defendant. Both were outside strangers who had purchased the several shares of the separated owners of the thikans in dispute. A partition suit was not, therefore, necessary. ANTAJI v. DATTAJI

181. ———— Sale in execution of decree of joint family property—Right of purchaser—Suit to cancel sale.—G, the brother of the plaintiff, executed a mortgage to the defendant during the plaintiff's minority. The deed recited that the money was borrowed to pay off a family debt, and to defray family expenses. The defendant sued G on the mortgage, and obtained a decree. A house, which was part of the family property, was sold in execution, and was purchased by the defendant himself. The plaintiff sued to have the sale set aside and to recover his half share in the house. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to be put into possession of the whole house, the defendant being left to his remedy by a suit for partition. The plaintiff, however, having claimed only the restoration of his half share, the decree was limited accordingly. Held also that it was not competent for the Court in this suit to go into the question whether the mortgage by G was binding on the minor plaintiff. MARUTI NARAYAN v. 182. ———— Suit by purchaser for share of undivided property—Sale of joint family property in execution of decree.—A judgment-creditor attached in execution and caused to be sold the judgment-debtor's alleged one-twelfth share as a member of an undivided Hindu family, in seven parcels of land of which the applicant was in possession as manager. At the sale Y became the purchaser; and subsequently, and without having himself entered into possession, Y assigned his interest in the purchase to G. G claimed to be put into possession, and obtained a Court's order, directing that possession should be given to him. The applicant, however, obstructed the execution of the said order, and applied to the High Court to declare G not entitled to the possession he sought. No division of the property in question, by metes or bounds or otherwise, between the members of the undivided family had ever been made, nor had the judgment-debtor ever had separate occupancy of any definite share of the same. Held that G's proper remedy was by a suit for partition, and that he could not claim to be put into joint possession with the applicant and the other members of the undivided Hindu family, of the family property. BALAJI ANANT RAJADIKSHA v. Declaration of right to possession.—In a suit by members of a Malabar tarwad to set aside a sale in execution of a decree, passed on a mortgage which had been executed by their karnavan and senior anandravana in consolidation of two prior mortgages executed, respectively, to secure two debts, it appeared that one of these debts was binding and the other not binding on the tarwad. Held that the Court should declare the plaintiffs entitled to the property sold notwithstanding the sale, but subject to the charge created to secure the binding debt. KUNHI MANNAN v. D (who was a Hindu widow without surviving issue) and E pleaded division, and that D had sold and assigned the estate to E. This alienation was not shown to have been made for purposes recognized by Hindu law. Held that the District Munsif, in disallowing the plaintiff's claim to immediate possession, should not have provided for the re-assignment of the estate from E to D for D's life, but that he was right in declaring that after D's death the property should revert to the plaintiffs as heirs of C. PRIYA GAUNDAN v. 185. ———— Suit by member of undivided family against manager—Decree on partition.—A member of an undivided family brought a suit for partition against his father, the managing member, and eight others, of whom the second, third, and fourth defendants were plaintiff's infant brothers, and obtained a decree. The Judge proceeded to ascertain the amount of the plaintiff's share in the following manner. He assessed what he considered to be the sum received by the first defendant from the estate, deducted from that sum what he considered should have been the gross expenditure of the defendant, and decreed delivery by the defendant of one-fifth of the remainder. Held that such a decree was erroneous. TARA CHAND v. 137. ——— Suit by member of undivided Hindu family for declaration of his right to a portion of the joint estate sold in execution of decree against another member.—In a suit by a member of an undivided Hindu family to have his right declared to a portion of the joint estate which had been sold by the Civil Court in execution of a decree against his co-parcener alone,—Held that the plaintiff should have a decree declaring that he was entitled to joint possession along with the execution purchaser as tenant in common. But that, if a division in specie were desired, a suit should be brought for that purpose, Mahabala v. Timaya, 12 Bom., Rep., 138, followed. BARAJI LAKSHMAN v. VARUDER VINAYAK (I. L. 138. ——— Suit by member of joint undivided Hindu family to recover possession of property alienated by another member—Position of purchaser from one member of family.—A obtained a decree in a suit against B, and executed it by the sale of certain plots of land which B alleged belonged to him—A himself becoming the purchaser thereof. A entered into possession of the plots of land under his purchase, and remained in possession thereof for a considerable time. As a matter of fact, the plots of land belonged—part absolutely and part as to mortgagees in possession—not to B solely, but jointly to him and his father C and others, the members of an undivided Hindu family. A suit having been brought by C to recover possession of the said plots of land from A and for mesne profits, and for payment over of a sum of Rs 800 paid to A by the mortgagor of the mortgaged property in redemption of his mortgage,—Held that A was entitled to stand in B's place and to retain possession in respect of B's share in the said land, but no further; and that he held the mesne profits and the said sum of Rs 800 as trustee for the other members of the said undivided family to the extent of their shares in the family property. *DUGAPPA SHETI v. The lower Courts awarded two-fifths of the land to K and R as being the amount of their share in the land. Held by the High Court that the decree could not be maintained, as K and R, being two of several co-parceners in undivided property, could not say that they were entitled to a specific share in any portion of that property. They might have sued for a general partition, or for a decree declaring them

It was purchased by S, who sold it to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for possession, and the other co-sharers were made party defendants to the suit, which, however, was held, as against them, to be barred by limitation. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to be put into joint possession of the land with them, although the suit as against them was barred. *KRISHNAJI BIN MALJI v. sufficient as to the former, but not the latter right.—In cross-suits between the owners of adjoining estates, each claimed, against the other, to be entitled to, and to be put into possession of, property situate on the boundary between their estates. The High Court dismissed both claims on the ground that the evidence of the exclusive right of either party was insufficient. Held that, although this might be so, there was, nevertheless, sufficient evidence of possession having been held by both the one and the other, and of the title of both, to support the conclusion that each had a claim to an equal moiety, to which each should be declared entitled. Each should be put into possession of the moiety which was opposite to and adjoined his estate. KHAGENDRA NARAIN CHOWDRY v. MATANGINI DEBI

The sub-lessee made default in payment of rent. E L distrained their crops. Thereupon the original lessors intervened, claiming the crops as theirs. The question of the distraint having been decided by the Court of revenue against him, E L then brought a suit in a Civil Court asking for ejectment of both his lessors and his lessees and to be put into actual possession himself. Held that the plaintiff was precluded by reason of the lease granted by him, the term of which had not expired, from obtaining actual possession, unless the sub-lessees were ejected, which could only be done through the Court of revenue. But the plaintiff was entitled to a decree declaring his title as sur-i-peshgi lessee and putting him into possession of the rents and profits of the holding as sur-i-peshgi lessee; the decree for possession to be executed under s. 264 of the Code of Civil Procedure. SITA RAM v. He appealed against the amount fixed, but failed in his appeal, and during his appeal the time fixed for the deposit expired, and the Judge refused to fix any further time. Held that the plaintiff, in appealing from the original decree, could not escape from the obligation which it imposed, and the lower Appellate Court was not bound by law to insert in its decree any special direction concerning such deposit, unless occasion called for it, although it was competent to have done so. *SHEO PERSHAD LALL v. 157. ——— Allegation by plaintiff that a certain sum is the actual price—Omission to allege readiness and willingness to pay actual price—Discretionary power of Court to grant decree.—The Court of first instance dismissed a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption, although it found that the plaintiff had such right, on the ground that the actual price of the property was a larger amount than the amount which the plaintiff alleged it in his plaint to be, and the plaintiff had not in his plaint expressed his readiness and willingness to pay any amount which the Court might find to be the actual price. On appeal by the plaintiff, the lower Appellate Court gave him a decree conditional on the payment of such larger amount within a fixed time. Held that it was not necessary to interfere with the exercise of the lower Appellate Court's discretion in the matter, particularly as the defendant had not objected to such exercise in his memorandum of second appeal. *Durga Prasad v. 158. ——— Bical suits to enforce the right of pre-emption—Civil Procedure Code, s. 214.—K and R, two co-sharers of a village, instituted separate suits in which each claimed to enforce the right of pre-emption, based on the wajib-ul-ur, in respect of the same sale of a share in a village, to a stranger. The Court of first instance made the plaintiff in one suit a defendant in the other. The suits were tried together, and R being held to have a better right under the terms of the wajib-ul-ur than K, his suit was decreed, contingent upon payment by him of the purchase-money within one month from the date of the decree. K's suit was dismissed absolutely. Held that decrees in cases where two rival pre-emptors of the same decree seek to enforce pre-emption, as each necessarily must do, in respect of the whole property conveyed by one transfer, are defective if they dismiss the suit for any proportion of the property without providing for the contingency of the rival pre-emptor decree-holder omitting to enforce his decree in respect of the share decreed to him. A fortiori, where the rival decree-holders possess different degrees of pre-emption, the decree, in at least one of the rival suits, must be essentially defective if no provision is made for the contingency of the superior pre-emptor never enforcing his right. The question what should be the form of the decree in such cases can be dealt with only by exercising the vast and flexible jurisdiction possessed by the Courts of equity in adapting their decrees to the exigencies of each case, so as to grant the actual relief required by the parties. Held, applying the principles of equity to the present case, that the Court of first instance acted rightly in adding the name of each rival pre-emptor as party defendant in the suit of the other, and in decreeing the claim of the superior pre-emptor, but that the decree in K's suit was defective and inequitable, inasmuch as it dismissed the suit in toto, disallowing his pre-emptive claim wholly irrespective of the contingency of B's omission to enforce the pre-emption decreed to him by depositing the purchase-money within time. As K admittedly had pre-emptive right as against the vendee, his suit should have been decreed against the latter in the terms of s. 214 of the Civil Procedure Code; subject, however, to the condition that the decree should not take effect, so far as the enforcement of pre-emption was concerned, in the event of R's enforcing the superior pre-emptive right decreed to him. KASHI NATH v. judgment of the Court taken by a Deputy Registrar cannot be consulted for the purpose of explaining or aiding in the construction of a decree. Where, therefore, a decree was, on the face of it, an ordinary decree in a partition suit, for the taking of the accounts between the partners in the usual way, the Court refused to allow the respondent to show, by reference to such a note, that what the decree meant was that he was to be credited, and his partners debited, with certain payments in toto, and not with their respective shares only. SUMAR AHMED v. HAJI ISMAIL HAJI HANID . . . I. L. R., 1 Bom., 158

170. — Discrepancy between decree and judgment—Limitation of, by judgment.—Where a decree of the Sudder Court was in general terms, viz., "that the appeal be decreed with costs," though the judgment indicated a different intention,—Held that the decree ought not to have been used to obtain execution for the whole of the claim, but restricted to that which it was the manifest intention of the Court to grant. MSHDEE BEY v. ZILLAL THAKOOR . . . 15 W. R., 580

171. — Ambiguous decree—Recital to decree—Judgment.—Where a case was "decreed with costs and damages," the decree not indicating what damages were to be paid or who were the persons made liable, the first Court was held to have dealt reasonably in construing it with the recital which preceded those words, and a portion of the judgment which was set out in the decree. CHUNDAR MEMUN THAKOOR v. AMRITO CHUNDAR THAKOOR . . . 19 W. R., 848

172. — Decree of Appellate Court reversing summary order.—The reversal of a decree by an Appellate Court implies an order setting aside all that has been done under orders contradictory of the final order in the suit; but where a summary order, made in the course of execution-proceedings, has been set aside in a separate suit brought for that purpose, it cannot be necessarily implied that the intention of the Court was to cancel everything that had been done in the course of the summary proceedings. TOYBOON v. MAHOMED WAJID (3 C. L. R., 504)

173. — Statement of claim in the decree of Appeal Court not a part of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 579 and 587—Practice.—On a second appeal, the High Court decreed the plaintiff's claim with costs throughout; but the claim, as stated in the paper book of appeal, differed from the claim as it had been stated in the plaint. Held that the decree was to be understood as referring to the claim as stated in the plaint, and not as described in the paper book. Ss. 579 and 587 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) do not require the claim to be stated in the decree, so as to make such statement a part of the decree itself. SOUDS SRINIVASAPPA v. dition—Precedent—Limitation.—The plaintiff obtained a decree on the 26th July 1882, which directed that he should give the defendant possession of certain parcels of land at the end of next Margashirsha (i.e., 9th January 1883), and that, on his doing so, the defendant should remove certain hedges and sheds, and restore the land in suit to the plaintiff. On the 9th December 1885, the plaintiff applied to execute the decree. The defendant resisted the application as being time-barred. He contended that, the plaintiff having failed to deliver up the land in his possession within the time specified in the decree, he had lost his right to execute the decree. Held that the application was not time-barred. The specification of the end of Margashirsha had merely the effect of postponing the operation of the decree till that time, and the plaintiff had three years from that date within which he might seek execution. The mention of a term when a particular right is to become enforceable is not a condition precedent, whether the enforcement be otherwise subject to a condition or not. NARAYAN CHITKO JUVKAR v. VITHUL PARSHOTAM (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 28)

175. — Construction in execution of an order in Council—Possession.—An order of Her Majesty in Council was that a decree-holder should recover what was demarcated by "the thakbust map and proceedings of 1839." Held, on the construction of the order, that the latter words meant the proceedings relating to the thakbust map, and did not include a survey map which differed from it. RADHA PERAKAD SINGH v. (5) ACCOUNT, DECREE FOR.

176. — Decree for account, Nature of—Rights of parties insufficiently defined—Parties.—A decree for an account is not a mere direction to enquire and report. It proceeds, and must always proceed, upon the assumption that the party calling for it is entitled to the sum found due. It is a decree affirming his rights only, leaving it to be enquired into how much is due to him from the party accounting. A decree for an account of dealings and transactions of a deceased partner in a Hindu family bank and for a dissolution of the partnership was in this case reversed on the ground that the respective rights of the parties were not sufficiently defined and declared, and that the proper parties were not before the Court. JANOKY Doss v. BINDABUN Doss . . . 3 Moore's L. A., 175

177. — Decree for account—Amendment of clerical error in decree by Appellate Court.—The decree of the Court of first instance directed the commissioner to take an account of the moneys paid by the plaintiff, during the period between 24th January 1865 and the date of the filing of the plaint, for the use and at the request of the defendants, and to allow credit to the defendants for the sums for which the plaintiff had given credit in his particulars of demand, and for all other sums for which the defendants should prove themselves entitled to credit, wherever the same might have become payable. The defendants, in their surcharge to the plaintiff's account, claimed credit for various payments made by them to the plaintiff between 25th January 1865 and 5th July 1865. The plaintiff claimed to appropriate these payments in satisfaction of his claim against the defendants prior to 24th January 1865. The commissioner by his construction of the terms of the decree held the plaintiff entitled to make such appropriation. The Judge in the Court of first instance explained his decree to mean that the whole account, prior to 24th January 1865, was wiped out, and directed the commissioner that the plaintiff was not entitled to make the appropriation he claimed. Held that the construction put by the commissioner on the decree was right. Where the Court of first instance puts upon its own decree a construction which to the Appellate Court appears to render the decree erroneous, and the decree, on the face of it, admits of another construction, which to the Appellate Court appears to render the decree correct, the Appellate Court will adopt the latter construction. HIRJI JINA v. (c) BUILDINGS, ERECTION OR REMOVAL OF.

178. — Suit for removal of obstruction—Decree for plaintiff qualified by declaring that parties retain rights exercised prior to obstruction.—In a suit for the removal of a building which the defendants had erected, and which was an obstruction to the plaintiff's right to use a courtyard adjoining their residences, it appeared that the land on which the building stood did not belong to either party, but that all the inhabitants of the mohalla had from time immemorial exercised a right of way over it to and from their houses. It also appeared that on a part of the same land there had formerly stood a thatched building used as a "sitting place" by the residents of the mohalla. The lower Appellate Court, while decreeing the claim, observed that the defendants, if they liked, could construct and use a shed "according to the old state of things" and "without offering obstruction to" the right of the plaintiffs to "use it as a sitting place when necessary." Held that this was not a declaration of a right in the defendants to build, but merely a statement that the decree would not operate as an interference with the rights of the parties to have a similar thatched building set up as had existed in former times. Official Trustee of Bengal v. —Where a decree of the High Court directed that the respondent (the plaintiff) should pay to the appellants (the defendants) the costs incurred by them in the lower Court.—Held that the costs referred to were those which were specified in the decree appealed against as the costs incurred by the defendants. If several defendants have served in their defence and the lower Court has specified the costs incurred by each of them, the costs payable under the above directions will be their several costs. If they have joined in their defence, or, though they have severed their defence, but the lower Court has specified a single set of costs as the only costs which it will allow or treat as costs in the suit, then the costs payable will be the single set of costs. RAM CHUNDER SEN v. —Where a decree was passed awarding the plaintiff's claim "with usual costs and interest" without any specification of the costs intended save the mention of some items in the schedule, and without mentioning the rate of the interest or the date from which it should run, it was held that the decree was meant to give all the costs which the successful party had incurred in the prosecution of the suit from the commencement until the date of the final decree, including costs incurred in the abortive part of the proceedings, i.e., in trials set aside, and that the interest was to be at twelve per cent. on the amount of money actually decreed. BROUGHTON v. If the defendants do not pay the amount within the time prescribed, they will lose their right of redeeming the property mortgaged, and possession thereof will be given to the plaintiffs." On the judgment-debtors making default, the decree-holders applied for execution: the Subordinate Judge directed execution to issue, but held that execution could not be had for costs under the terms of the decree; and this order was upheld by the District Judge on appeal. Held that the decree-holders were entitled to their costs of the suit from the judgment-debtors personally, or from properties belonging to the judgment-debtors other than those mortgaged. *RUTNESWAR SEIN v. E died in December 1893, leaving two sons. In February 1895 it came to the knowledge of the plaintiff that the properties had been the subject of a suit in this Court in 1894 between E and his nephews, the defendants 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and a consent decree had been passed therein whereby E was directed to convey it to his nephews and reserving to E a life-interest in the said property. establish his position. It was found on the evidence that no conveyance in pursuance of the decree had actually been executed by R., and the decree itself had not been registered. Held that the decree merely vested in the defendants 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 the immediate right to have a conveyance of the property executed, but such right was merely inchoate which it was within their power to complete. The plaintiff's right, therefore, overrides the interest of the defendants 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. ATUL KRISHNA MITTER v. MUTTY LAL MUKERJEE. 3 C. W. N., 30

(g) ENDOWMENT.

192. — Construction of a decree as to the appointment of a manager of the property of a religious institution.—A decree of the High Court declared its holder entitled, as the pandara sannadhi, or religious chief, of an adhinam, to see that a competent person, from among the tambirans who had received initiation at that institution, was appointed to fill the then vacant office of tambiran, managing certain matts. The decree directed that the pandara should name a tambiran of his adhinam for the office, whom, after inquiry as to his fitness, the subordinate Court should appoint. If that Court found him unfit, it was to appoint a tambiran of that adhinam upon its own selection. In execution, the pandara named a tambiran for the office, but died before the inquiry as to his fitness. His successor, as head of the adhinam, petitioned to withdraw the nomination, naming another tambiran. The subordinate Court made an order disallowing the withdrawal, and, after inquiry as to the fitness of the first-named tambiran, appointed him to the office. The High Court, on the pandara's appeal, decided that the first nomination had been competently withdrawn, and directed an inquiry as to the fitness of the person secondly named, finding on the evidence that the first-named was not fit. Held that on the construction of the decree the first nomination could not be withdrawn and a second one substituted before the inquiry, and that the person first named was entitled to the Court's decision as to his fitness. On the facts, the finding of the High Court that the first-named tambiran was unfit was not affirmed, and the order of the Subordinate Judge was maintained. *PONNAMBALA TAMBIRAN v. 194. — Stipulation involving forfeiture—Penalty—Consent decree.—A consent decree provided that the defendant should retain possession of certain land in perpetuity on payment of a fixed annual rent to the plaintiff, but that the plaintiff might re-enter in case the defendant failed to pay the rent. The rent was not paid, and the transferee of the plaintiff's interest under the decree sued for possession. The defendant contended that the above clause in the decree was a penal stipulation which the Court would not enforce. Held that the doctrine of penalties was not applicable to stipulations contained in decrees, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. *SHIRKULI TIMAPA HEGDA v. (i) HINDU WIDOW.

196. — Hindu widow—Construction of order made by Settlement Officer awarding estate to a Hindu widow—Transfer by widow, Effect of.—The plaintiffs obtained a declaratory decree that they were the reversioners and heirs apparent, expectant on the future death of a widow who, at the time of suit, had survived two co-widows, and that they, the plaintiffs, would be entitled to inherit at her death the estate that had belonged to the deceased husband. All parties had proceeded, as far as to the present appeal, on the view that the surviving widow had the widow's estate only. But an order made in the course of the settlement operations in 1865 had conferred the estate of the deceased on the three widows as well as on his mother, in equal shares of one-fourth each. Held that there was nothing in this order to show an intention to give to the mother and widows anything more than an interest, such as that which a Hindu widow takes; and that the inheritance would devolve in due course of law, an alienation which the widow had made operating only for her lifetime. *MUNHAL CHAUDHARI v. Upon the occurrence of (c), execution might issue for that instalment, with interest at twelve per cent. from the date of the decree. 198. ——— Construction of decrees for money payable by instalments—Term making the entire sum payable on default in payment of some of the instalments at certain dates.—A decree for money payable by yearly instalments made the full amount payable on both the first instalment being unpaid on the due date and two consecutive instalments being in default and unpaid at the same time. Defaults were made, and questions as to the rate of interest, on what amounts, and for what periods, by reason of the debtor's delay, interest was payable, were dealt with in an order of Her Majesty in Council, which made declarations as to the allowances of interest to which the decree-holder would be entitled on the adjustment of accounts between the parties. The accounts having been taken in the Court executing the order, the decree-holder applied for execution to the full amount. Held that the instalments having been paid, though not at due date, and applied in payment of interest, he was not entitled to such execution, because the contingency, on the happening of which he would have been entitled thereto, had not happened. SHAM KISHEN DAS v. 201. ——— Mortgage-decree directing accounts, etc., to be taken and report given—Tender of principal and interest before report—Refusal to accept tender and subsequent charge of interest.—A decree directed accounts to be taken of what was due for principal and interest under a mortgage, such interest to be allowed "up to the time of payment hereinafter mentioned, or until six months from the date of the decree," whichever first should happen, and further directed the plaintiff to pay what should be reported due for principal and interest up to the date of payment, and costs with interest at six per cent. from the date of taxation until payment, within six months after the Registrar should make his report. The plaintiff tendered a sum sufficient to cover the principal and interest due, but insufficient to cover costs, at a time prior to the drawing up of the Registrar's report. Held that the payment of principal and interest "hereinafter mentioned" referred to a time after the Registrar had made his report, because the sum to be paid was a sum reported to be due by the Registrar, and that, therefore, a tender, made before the Registrar's report was given, was not a sufficient tender to stop interest from the date of the tender. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF BENGAL v. Decree of Privy Council reversing decree declaratory of title—Mesne profits realized before reversal of decree.—Objections having been successfully raised under s. 246, Act VIII of 1869, against a decree-holder's attachment of a tenure, as the property of his judgment-debtor, he brought a regular suit, and obtained a declaratory decree that the property belonged to his debtor. He then took out execution, attached, sold, and himself purchased the property in question. The objector in the meantime appealed to the Privy Council, and, having obtained a decree reversing the declaratory decree, took out execution against the opposite party for costs and wasilat. The opposite party objected, but the Judge allowed the execution to proceed, and deputed an ameen to ascertain the amount of mesne profits collected. Held that the decree of the Privy Council could not be held to include restitution

Declaratory decree—Separate suit—Mesne profits, Meaning of—Decree awarding mesne profits.—In 1878 the plaintiff obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to receive, every year, from the defendant 12 per cent. of the rents and profits of a certain inam village. The decree also awarded mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit. In 1884 the plaintiff sought, in execution of this decree, to recover his share of the profits of the village for the years 1882-83 and 1883-84. Held that the plaintiff could not proceed to enforce his rights under the decree by way of execution. His remedy was by a suit on the right established by the decree. The decree had merely declared the right of the plaintiff to a certain share of produce, and payment was ordered of mesne profits computed according to certain principles. Such an award was not an award of a periodical payment in æternum. The very word "mesne" implied a terminus ad quem as well as à quo, and, in the absence of a special order, the terminus was the date of the decree. VINAYAK AMRIT DESHPANDE v. ABASI HAIBATEAV I. L. R., 12 Bom., 416

Interpretation of decree awarding "future mesne profits"—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 211.—A decree for possession of immovable property was passed by the District Judge of Mirzapur on the 12th of November 1847 in favour of a plaintiff declaring that "the plaintiff is also entitled to mesne profits." That decree was affirmed by an order of Her Majesty in Council, dated the 11th of May 1895, without variation in respect of the order as to mesne profits. Possession of the immovable property to which the decree related was obtained by the decree-holder on the 30th of November 1895. Held that the decree of the Privy Council was to be construed as a decree awarding mesne profits up to the date when possession was obtained and from the date of the institution of the suit. Fakharuddin Mahomed Ahsan v. Official Trustees of Bengal, I. L. R., 8 Cal., 178; I. R., 8 I. A., 197, and Parau Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen, I. L. R., 19 Cal., 152, referred to. BIJAI BAHADUR SINGH v. He obtained a decree in such suit in these terms: "That the claim of the plaintiff, with costs of the suit and future interest at eight annas per cent. per mensem, be decreed." Held by the majority of the Full Bench that such decree was not merely a money-decree, but was also one for the enforcement of a lien. Janki Prasad v. The fourth page contained the following order: "The claim for Rs. 10,814-11-0 be decreed by enforcement of hypothecation and auction-sale of talukh M: it is further decreed that the defendants do pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,002-0-6 costs of the suit." Per OLDFIELD, J. (STUART, C.J., dissenting), on the construction of such decree, that the order contained in the fourth page was part of such decree, notwithstanding that such page did not bear the Court's signature, as the Court's signature at the top of the page covered the whole document, and such decree was not a mere money-decree, but one enforcing the hypothecation of immovable property. Per STUART, C.J.—That, construing such decree with reference to the plaint and judgment in the suit in which it was made, and not with reference to the Court's signatures, such decree was not a mere money-decree, but one enforcing the hypothecation of immovable property. RAM PRASAD RAM v. Decree for redemption directing payment of mortgage-debt within a specified time—Computation of time allowed for payment when the decree is affirmed on appeal.—Where a decree of a lower Court is confirmed on appeal, and that decree directs something to be done within a specified time, time is to be counted from the date of the appellate decree. Where, therefore, in a suit by a mortgagee on a mortgage, the decree of the Court of first instance directed payment of the mortgage-debt within two months from the date of the decree from which the defendants appealed, but which was confirmed by the Appellate Court,—Held, under the circumstances of the case, that it was the intention of the Appellate Court that the term of two months allowed for payment should be counted from the date of its own decision, and not from the date of the original decree. DAULAT JAGTIVAN v. On the 28th February 1891 the defendant deposited in Court a sum calculated so as to include interest up to that date, but subsequently objected to pay interest after the 28th February 1890. Held by PETHERAM, C.J., and BEVERLEY, J. 225. ——— Decree for possession after expiry of period of grace—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58—Right of redemption.—On default made in payment on a simple mortgage, a Court, instead of decreeing the proper relief, had made a decree (which, however, had afterwards become final, and had been executed) for possession by the mortgagee after a period of grace. That decree would rightly have been for a judicial sale (Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 58). In this suit brought by the mortgagor for an account to be rendered by the mortgagee, and for re-delivery of possession, alleging that the account would show payment of the debt already made out of the rents and profits.—Held that the decree for possession did not amount to a decree for foreclosure or preclude redemption, the possession of the decree-holder having only been as mortgagee, and having involved liability to account to the mortgagor. PAPANMA RAO v. The defendants refused. Thereupon the plaintiffs presented a dakhast in execution, praying (inter alia) for the delivery of those books and documents. The Subordinate Judge rejected this application on the ground that it was beyond the terms of the decree. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of the account books and documents in question, as being essential to the proper and effectual enjoyment and management of the village awarded by the decree. Such books and documents were properly to be regarded as accessory to the estate and as claimable by those to whom it had been awarded. The vendee (defendant) preferred an appeal from this decree, which the Appellate Court, on the vendee's application, struck off on the 18th September 1879. Held that, assuming that the order of the Appellate Court, by reason that it did not award costs to the decree-holder (respondent), might have been made the subject of a second appeal to the High Court, inasmuch as the decree of the 18th February 1879 could not have

The period specified in the decree for the payment of the purchase-money, the day on which the decree was made not being computed, expired on the 11th January following. That day was a Sunday: the plaintiff paid the purchase-money into Court on the next day, the 12th January. Held that, inasmuch as the day on which the decree was made should not be taken into account in computing the period specified in the decree for the payment of the purchase-money, nor the last day of that period, that day being a Sunday, the plaintiff had complied with the condition imposed on him by the decree. Semble—That if the plaintiff had actually failed to deposit the purchase-money within thirty days as directed by the decree, his suit would have been liable to be dismissed, as he could not have claimed to have such period computed from the date the decree became final. *DARI DIN BAI v. 247. — Confirmation of decrees by High Court on appeal—Mistake.—A obtained a decree for costs in a suit brought by B against A, and the decree was confirmed on appeal to the High Court on 18th June 1869. On 18th December 1871, A applied for execution of the decree, but it was found that the decree omitted to specify from whom A was to obtain his costs, and it was held that no execution could be taken out under the decree. A therefore applied to the Judge who passed the original decree to amend the decree, and the decree was amended on 21st August 1872 by inserting B as the party who was to pay A's costs.

A then made a fresh application for execution, which was allowed. 252. ———— Decree for costs
—Execution of decree.—In the lower Appeal Court, the plaintiff obtained a decree which directed parties to bear their own costs in proportion in both the Courts, while the judgment directed that the parties should bear each other's costs in proportion in both the Courts. The decree was confirmed by the High Court in cross second appeals without writing a judgment. There was no point taken in either of the appeals as to costs. The plaintiff subsequently applied to the High Court for the amendment of the decree under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). It was contended for the defendant that the application should have been made to the lower Appeal Court. Held that the only decree which existed for the purposes of execution after the High Court confirmed the decree of the Court below was the decree of the High Court into which that of the lower Court became incorporated. The application was, therefore, properly made to the High Court. Held further that, that being so and there having been no appeal by either party against the order as to costs, the Court might properly look at the judgment of the Court below with a view to making the decree as to costs agree with it. SHIVLAL KALIDAS v. JUMAKLAL NATHIJI DESAI

253. ———— Power of Court of first instance to amend its decree after appeal.—In a suit for land with mesne profits, the District Munsif delivered judgment for the plaintiff, and recorded therein a finding that he was entitled to mesne profits as from a certain date, it having previously been arranged that the amount, if any, awarded for mesne profits should be determined in execution. In the decree no mention was made of the date from which the mesne profits were to be calculated, but it was stated merely that the amount was to be determined in execution. The case went on appeal before the District Judge, who modified the decree in certain particulars unconnected with mesne profits. With a view to execution, the plaintiff applied to the Court of first instance to bring the decree into conformity with the judgment. The Court having made an order accordingly, it was objected in the High Court on revision that the order was made without jurisdiction. Held that the jurisdiction of the Court of first instance to amend the decree under s. 206 was ousted by the confirmation of his decree on appeal. PICHAYAYANGAR v. 254. ———— Power of Court of first instance to amend appeal—Civil Procedure Code, s. 551.—On the hearing of an appeal by a District Court, certain special costs were directed to be paid by the defendant, but, by a clerical error, that direction was omitted from the decree when it was drawn up. Plaintiff applied to the District Judge under s. 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure for rectification of the error in the decree, but the Court refused to amend, it appearing that defendant had appealed to the High Court, which had dismissed his appeal and confirmed the decree of the District Court. The appeal had in fact been dismissed under s. 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff then petitioned the District Court to review its order refusing to amend. This was rejected, the District Court holding that the decree, of which amendment was asked, was the decree of the High Court, which a District Court had no power to amend. On plaintiff petitioning the High Court to revise this order of the District Court, —Held (1) that the case was governed by the ruling of the Full Bench in Picharayyanagar v. Seshayyanagar (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 214), where it was held that the jurisdiction of a Court of first instance to amend a decree under s. 206 was ousted by the confirmation of that decree on appeal; 2) that the decision referred to applies equally to second appeals dismissed under s. 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and to the second appeals tried after notice to the respondent, MUNISAMI NAIDU v. 255. ———— Decree affirmed on appeal—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 579, 623, 624—Review of judgment.—The effect of s. 579 of the Civil Procedure Code is to cause the decree of the Appellate Court to supersede the decree of the first Court even where the appellate decree merely affirms the original decree, and does not reverse or modify it. Where a decree has been affirmed on appeal, the only decree which can be amended under s. 206 of the Code is the decree to be executed, and the decree to be executed is that of the Appellate Court and not the superseded decree of the first Court, though the latter may, if necessary, be referred to for the purpose of executing the appellate decree. The only Court which has jurisdiction to amend the appellate decree is the Court of Appeal. So held by the Full Bench, MAHMOOD, J., dissenting, Shohrat Singh v. Bridgman, I. L. R., 4 All., 376, explained and followed. Kato Kinkar Roy v. Burrodacant Roy, 18 Moore's I. A., 465, discussed. The insertion of the word "not" in the last line but one of the judgment and also in the head-note in Shohrat Singh v. Bridgman was a clerical error. Per MAHMOOD, J.—Where a decree has been simply affirmed on appeal, s. 579 of the Code does not imply that the appellate decree supersedes the original decree so as to render it ineffective for purposes of execution. In such a case the lower Court continues to have jurisdiction to entertain an application for amendment of its own decree under s. 206 of the Code; and such application is not governed by any article of the Limitation Act, and may be made at any time. It may be granted under s. 206, even where an application for review of judgment under s. 823 upon the same grounds would be barred by s. 624. A decree awarding the plaintiffs possession of immoveable property did not comply with s. 206 of the Code by containing the particulars of the claim or specifying clearly the relief granted. On appeal by the defendant, the High Court, in general terms, confirmed the decree and dismissed the appeal. The decree-holders then applying for execution, the judgment-debtors objected that the decree was incapable of execution, and this objection was allowed by the High Court on appeal. The decree-holders applied to the High Court to amend its decree, but the application was refused; and they then made a similar application to the first Court to amend its original decree, which had been affirmed on appeal. This application was granted by a Judge who was not the Judge who had passed the original decree. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that the Court below had no jurisdiction to make such amendment, the original decree having been superseded by the High Court's appellate decree. Held by MAHMOOD, J., contra, that the Court below had jurisdiction to make such amendment, and could make it any time; that the High Court's decree could not be amended, because the former order refusing amendment had become final and operated as res judicata; that the amendment of the original decree under s. 206 was not barred by s. 624; and that it would be denying justice on account of technicalities to hold that the original decree, though affirmed on appeal, could be neither executed nor amended. MURHAMMAD SULAIMAN KHAN v. 256. Finding in judgment not embodied in decree—Amendment of decree—Appeal against amended decree—Time how calculated.—In a suit for a declaration of title to land and for possession, which was based upon a will alleged to have been made in plaintiff's favour, the Subordinate Judge, finding the document to be a forgery, dismissed the suit. The fourth defendant had been made a party, inasmuch as he claimed a portion of the land as alienee. Though the case for the plaintiff failed, the Subordinate Judge, on the above finding, dealt in his judgment with an issue which had been framed regarding the validity or otherwise of the alleged alienation to the fourth defendant. He held that it had been made for no consideration, and found the issue against the fourth defendant. The decree dismissing the suit, which bore date the 22nd of June 1896, contained no reference to the finding against the fourth defendant on that issue. The fourth defendant applied for a review of the judgment, complaining that, as the suit had been dismissed, the reference in the judgment to the alleged alienation in his favour was unnecessary, and might, if permitted to stand, operate against him as res judicata in any subsequent suit that might be brought, and praying that the finding might be either expunged or modified in his favour. Upon this being refused, fourth defendant applied, under s. 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the decree might be brought into conformity with the judgment, and an order was made on 27th October 1896, adding to the decree a clause to the effect that the issue referred to had been found against the fourth defendant. On 12th December 1896, fourth defendant preferred an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, but the District Judge rejected it as being out of time. Held that, the decree being in conformity with the judgment, the Subordinate Judge had no power to vary it; and that the words which had been added must be expunged, and the decree restored to its original state. Also that the finding on the issue against the fourth defendant was, in fact, no finding except with regard to the question of consideration. Per SUBRAMANIA AYYAR, J.—That where a decree which is at variance with the judgment is brought into conformity with the latter under s. 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the date of the rectification is immaterial with reference to the calculation of the time in which any appeal may be preferred against such decree. But where a decree is wrongly varied, a party affected by such variation should be entitled to calculate the time during which an appeal may be preferred as commencing from the date of the variation. PARAMESWARA v. 257. Compromise after decree—Power of High Court to amend or review decree—Civil Procedure Code, s. 628—Proceeding in execution barred by time—Limitation Act—Act X V of 1877, s. 11, art. 179.—The High Court has no power to alter its own decree, except under the provisions of either s. 206 or s. 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The ground of review must have been existing at the time of the decree, the s. 628 not authorizing review of a decree, which was right, on the happening of a subsequent event. After a decree for land against four defendants, a compromise was made between the plaintiff and the third defendant. The first and fourth had acknowledged the plaintiff's right. The second and third had defended the suit, and the decree had been made, and affirmed on appeal to the High Court, jointly and severally against the first three and conditionally against the fourth. An application by the second and third defendants for leave to appeal to Her Majesty was withdrawn, the two parties to the compromise having obtained an order for amendment of the decree in its terms. For the execution of the decree against the three defendants, other than the third, as to the proportionate part of the property sued for, and not the subject of the compromise, the decree-holder afterwards obtained an order. This order was reversed by the High Court. Hence this appeal. Held that the order directing the amendment of the decree in the terms of the compromise was beyond the powers of the High Court, and was without operation either in favour of or against those defendants who had not been parties to the petition for that amendment. Held also, on the decree-holder's petition for execution of the decree, that the period of limitation commenced from the date of the primary, and not of the amended, decree of the High Court. Execution was, therefore, barred by limitation. Instead of attempting the alteration in the decree, the High Court could properly have made the compromise a rule of Court, and have stayed all

On the 18th March 1872, an order was passed by the Recorder of Rangoon, which was as follows: "By consent the property subject to the equitable mortgage to be given up to the plaintiff in satisfaction of all claims and demands against the defendant under the decree of the High Court." On the 3rd July 1872 the Recorder directed the defendant to execute within six days a conveyance of the mortgaged property to the plaintiff. An order was made granting the petition and allowing the decreed amount to be paid by instalments. Some months afterwards, the petitioner, charging that the vakil had presented the former-petition fraudulently and without authority, applied to have his decree executed. The civil Judge refused to alter the former order or to notice petitioner's allegations against his vakil. On appeal, the High Court directed the Judge to investigate these allegations. The civil Judge found that the vakil was authorized to present the petition, and that his conduct was not fraudulent. Held that such a petition as that presented by the vakil, even if within the scope of his duty, should not be permitted to alter the terms of a final decree. VENKATARAM MAHA v. 278. — Mistake in decree—Discovery of mistake on appeal.—A compromise set up by the defendants in the present suit having been rejected, a decree was given to the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 62,913, awarded in the original suit. That decree was upheld on appeal; but as it was alleged that on the facts stated in the plaint in the original suit, the plaintiff's mother's share of the dower was an eighth, and not a third, the Privy Council held that plaintiff ought not to benefit by that mistake, if it was a mistake; and they accordingly left it to the lower Court to enquire into that point, and to let execution go for the eighth or the third share, according as the fact might turn out. ABDOOL ALI v. the amount of wasilat should be ascertained. As the parties did not choose to go into the enquiry as to meene profits, the Court, on a motion by Government, called upon the parties to appear, and, on their refusing to do so, altered its original order with respect to the payment of the stamp duty, and declared that it should be realized from both the parties jointly. Held that the Court had no authority to make the second order in favour of Government, and that the proceedings taken in execution thereof were without legal foundation. *SHOSTER CHURN ROY v. The decree of the High Court did not contain any order as to the payment of the stamp fees, and the Government applied to have the decree amended in that respect. Held that the application must be refused on the ground that the Government, not being a party to the suit, had no right to be heard in the matter. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL

Subsequently, on application by the decree-holder, and without giving notice to the judgment-debtor, the Court which passed the decree, purporting to act under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, altered the decree and made it for a sum of Rs. 1,460. The decree-holder took out execution, and the judgment-debtor objected that the decree was for Rs. 1,282 and had been improperly altered. No details of the villages were given in the plaint itself, but a separate paper containing a list of villages was filed with the plaint. The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of "all the villages claimed," but there was no indication in the decree what those villages were. Held that the Court executing the decree was not justified in reading the contents of the list of villages attached to the plaint into the decree, and awarding the decree-holder possession of the villages named in such list. *S. Also that, in saying that by "dismiss" his predecessor had meant "decree," the Judge had altered the decree in a manner not warranted by the terms of s. 206; that he had, therefore, exercised his jurisdiction

Where a Court, on the ground that the defendant was "hard pressed," directed the amount of a decree to be paid by instalments extending over ten years, and allowed only one-half of the usual rate of interest,—Held that there was no "sufficient reason" for directing payment of the amount of the decree by instalments, and that such Court had exercised its discretion injuriously to the plaintiff by the length of the period over which instalments were extended, and by allowing a rate of interest less than the ordinary rate. BINDA PRASAD v. The application was then struck off on the 26th June 1878. On the 30th June 1881, the decree-holder again applied for execution, and on the 11th July 1881 the judgment-debtor, with the consent of the decree-holder, applied for time to pay the balance due till the 8th September 1881, and that application was also struck off. On the 1st March 1883, the decree-holder again applied for execution. Held that the application by the judgment-debtor made on the 11th July 1881, alleging that he had come to an arrangement with the decree-holder for the payment of the amount due by instalments, having resulted in its being registered and the proceedings struck off, amounted to a direction that the decretal amount be paid by instalments as stipulated in the petitions; and that, this being so, there was a decree passed on that date under the provisions of the second paragraph of s. 210 of the Code of Civil Procedure, of which the decree-holder was entitled to have execution. JHOTI SAHU v. While the application was pending, the judgment-debtor presented a petition to be allowed to pay the debt by instalments, and the decree-holder consenting to this, the Court made the following order:—"According to the application of both parties, it is ordered that the case be struck off, and the decree returned." The details of the instalments mentioned in the petition were endorsed on the decree by one of the amlahs of the Court, but it did not appear when or by whose order this was done. In an application for execution in accordance with this arrangement made on 7th March 1885,—Held that the order was not one recognizing or sanctioning the arrangement within the meaning of s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the Court, at the time it made the order, had no power to make any order for instalments, any application for that purpose being then barred by art. 175 of Act XV of 1887. Jhoti

the usual liberty to apply. On the 6th December defendant's power to specifically perform his contract, and he thereupon, on the 13th April 1887, applied to the Court which had granted the decree for a re-hearing of the suit on the question of damages, asking that, in lieu of the decree for specific performance, a decree for damages, when assessed, might be entered

296. ————— Decree in favour of plaintiff—Rectification of decree on application of defendant—Practice—Objection taken at hearing that application made to Court was not the application of which notice had been given to opposite party—Preliminary point.—The plaintiffs sued in 1877 for specific performance of an agreement, dated 27th September 1871, by which certain lauded properties were to be divided, as specified in the agreement between them and the defendants. The case came on for hearing on the 13th September 1878. The defendants did not appear, and a decree ex-parte was made, which declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the agreement of the 27th September 1871 specifically performed, and referred the suit to the commissioner for the preparation of conveyances, etc.
The decree was sealed on the 9th October 1878. No further steps were taken by any of the parties for six years, and in September 1884 the matter was first brought before the commissioner. He then directed the defendants to lodge with him all the title-deeds of the properties which by the agreement were to go to the plaintiffs as their share. The defendants thereupon applied that the plaintiffs should be directed to lodge the title-deeds of the properties which by the agreement were to go to them, but the commissioner refused to make this order, being of opinion that he was not authorized to do so under the decree, which contained no direction to him in respect thereof. The defendants on the 10th November 1884 gave notice to the plaintiffs that they would apply to the Court—
(1) "to set aside or vary its order of the 13th September 1878, so far as it related to the lodging of title-deeds, etc.; (2) to appoint a receiver of certain properties mentioned in the agreement; (3) to order the plaintiffs to deliver up to the defendants the properties which belonged to their share under the agreement; (4) to order certain accounts to be taken." This motion was not brought on until the 10th September 1885, on which day it was dismissed with costs; the Judge holding that the defendants had not shown sufficient cause to justify the setting aside of the decree under s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiffs having still kept possession of certain of the properties which by the agreement were to go to the defendants, notice was given by the defendants to the plaintiffs on the 26th April 1887 that they would apply to the Court for an order that the plaintiffs should perform their part of the agreement of the 27th September 1871, so far as it remained unperformed by them, by giving up to the defendants possession of certain properties and by accounting for the rents thereof, etc., etc. At the hearing of this motion, counsel for the defendants asked that the decree should be rectified, by directing that the agreement should be specifically performed by the plaintiffs and defendants respectively. Held that the defendants were entitled to have the decree rectified. The fact that the decree declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the agreement of the 27th September 1871 specifically performed implied an order for specific performance of that agreement by all the parties to it. The mandatory words, however, as against the plaintiffs, having been, in the first instance, omitted, might now be inserted in the decree, so as to put the decree into the ordinary and usual form of decree in cases of this nature. The Court has inherent power over its own records so long as those records are within its power, and it can set right any mistake in them. Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that the defendants were not entitled, in the present motion, to ask for a rectification of the decree, inasmuch as their notice of motion did not intimate that the point would be raised. Held that such an objection ought to be taken at once as a preliminary point.

As it was not made until the argument of counsel for the defendants was concluded, it should be taken that the form of the motion as made to Court was acquiesced in. The objection was then too late. *KARIM

297. ————— Decree for redemption within specified time—Appeal against decree—Power of Court in execution to extend time for redemption allowed by decree—Special ground for enlarging time.—The plaintiffs sued for the redemption of certain mortgaged property. On the 1st March 1886, a decree was passed declaring the plaintiffs entitled to redeem on payment by them to the defendants of Rs 649-11-0 within three months from the date of the decree. Against this decree the defendants (the mortgagees) appealed on the ground that a much larger sum than Rs 649-11-0 was due to them on the mortgage. The plaintiffs also filed objections to this decree under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), on the ground that the mortgage-debt had been long ago paid off, and that now a large sum was due to them from the mortgagees, who had been in receipt of the profits of the property. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs did not pay the Rs 649-11-0 within three months as ordered by the decree. On the 13th October 1886, they presented an application for execution, and paid into Court the Rs 649-11-0. The lower Court granted their application, and ordered possession of the property to be given to them. The defendant appealed to the High Court. Held, reversing the order of the Court below, that the Court in executing the decree had no power to alter the language of the decree, which it would virtually do if it enlarged the time mentioned in it by accepting the Rs 49-11-0 paid into Court by the plaintiffs on the 12th October 1886. Held also that, even if the Court had power to enlarge time in the course of execution, the mere fact that the plaintiff had lodged an appeal would afford no special ground for enlarging the time. ISHWARGAN v. 299. ——— Time fixed by decree for assumption of character of sannyasi—Enlargement on appeal of that time.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration of his right as jheer of a muth and for possession of the property of the muth, and obtained a decree, which was, however, made contingent upon his assuming the character of a sannyasi, which he had been directed to do on being nominated as jheer within the period of four months. The defendant preferred an appeal against this decree, and the plaintiff preferred an appeal praying for the enlargement of the period fixed, within which he was to become a sannyasi pending the disposal of the appeal preferred by the defendant. On the plaintiff's appeal, Held the Court had power to extend the time as prayed. RANGACHARIAS v. YESHA DIKSHATUB . . . I. L. R., 13 Mad., 524

300. ——— Power of Court to rectify its own mistake in order—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 370—Insolvency of plaintiff.—On the 3rd of August a case came on for hearing. Prior to that date, the plaintiff in this suit had been adjudicated an insolvent, and did not appear, but the official assignee appeared and applied for a postponement. The Court accordingly made the following order:—It is ordered that the suit be dismissed under s. 370 of the Civil Procedure Code, unless the official assignee elects, on or before the fifth day of October next, to continue the suit and give security for the defendants' costs. The time for complying with the order was subsequently extended, and the plaintiff in the meanwhile obtained an order allowing the insolvency proceedings to be withdrawn. The defendant now applied that the suit should be dismissed pursuant to the terms of the above order. The plaintiff objected, as he was now no longer an adjudged insolvent, and was ready to prosecute the suit. Held that the order had been made in an improper form, inasmuch as s. 370 gives the Court no power to order the dismissal of the suit. This part of the order, therefore, was wrong, and the Court could now rectify it by cancelling that portion of the order, and, as a consequence, refusing the defendants' application. LEKHRAJ CHUNILAL v. SHAMLAL NARAYNDAS I. L. R., 16 Bom., 404

301. ——— Interest given by amendment in decree which was not given by the judgment—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 305, 309, 622—Superintendence of High Court.—The plaintiffs sued for recovery of a certain sum of money and interest up to date of suit and for interest during the suit and subsequent to decree until satisfaction thereof. The Court in its judgment awarded the plaintiffs a specified sum of money, and ordered that the rest of the plaintiff's claim should stand dismissed. Subsequently the Court amended its decree by adding a decretal order for the payment to the plaintiffs by the defendant of interest during the pendency of the suit and after decree until the satisfaction of the debt. Held that it was illegal for the Court to decree the claim for interest by way of amendment of its decree, and that the order so amending the decree was open to revision. HASAN SHAH v. SHRO PRASAD . I. L. R., 15 All., 121

302. ——— Alteration of decree made by predecessor—Competency of Judge before taxation to reconsider an order as to costs made by his predecessor in office—Certificate of pleader's fee.—A Subordinate Judge, in granting the application of a plaintiff before him for permission to withdraw with leave to file a fresh suit in the same matter, made an order as to costs in favour of the defendants in the following terms:—"As the case has not been contested to the bitter end, half the pleader's fees are allowed and the process expenses, etc., incurred in the case, except those already refused to the defendants. For travelling and incidental expenses defendants to put in a bill in one week: this to be subject to the decision of the Court after hearing both parties. The application under s. 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure is granted with leave to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit for the same matter. Costs allowed to defendants as above." The Judge who had made the above order having been transferred before taxation was completed, Held that it was competent to his successor at taxation and before granting payment of the pleader's fees to consider whether the certificate given by a pleader as to the fee paid to him in the case was according to rule, and to disallow payment of any fee not duly certified as paid. DICK v. 303. ——— Decree in terms of an award ordering (inter alia) delivery of moveable property—Loss of part of such moveable property and consequent failure to deliver—

Application to insert in decree an order to pay value of such moveable property in event of failure to deliver—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 206-8.—A partition suit brought by a son against his father was referred to arbitration. On the 9th January 1890, the award was published, and on the 27th March 1890 the defendant moved for and obtained a decree in terms of the award. By this decree it was ordered that in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim the defendant should pay to him Rs. 1,06,000 in the manner therein stated, viz., Rs. 40,000 to be paid forthwith and the balance of Rs. 66,000 to be paid "upon the plaintiff's delivering to the defendant certain specified property, which included two vessels or buglows, called respectively the Nasri and Sambak." In no event was defendant to be required to pay the Rs. 66,000 before the 15th November 1890. At the date of the decree the vessel Sambak was at sea on a voyage, and on the 18th June 1890, while still on the voyage, she was lost. On the 15th November 1890, the plaintiff's attorneys demanded payment of the balance of Rs. 66,000. They offered to deliver the other properties specified in the decree, but stated that the vessel Sambak had been lost. They offered to pay its value, which they estimated at Rs. 1,000. The defendants, however, demanded the delivery of the buglows, which they stated to be worth a very large sum. The defendants having, under the circumstances, refused to pay the Rs. 66,000, the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree, which was refused. He then obtained a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why the decree of the 27th March should not be amended or rectified by stating therein the amount of money to be paid to the defendant as an alternative if delivery of the vessel Sambak could not be made, such delivery having become impossible. Held that the rule must be discharged. The objection was an objection to an award, not to a decree. Possibly it might have been open to the parties to object to the award before it was filed on the ground that it ought to have stated a sum to be paid to the defendant in case some of the property could not be delivered to him. If such an objection had been made, the Court might possibly have remitted the award or refused to file it. No such objection, however, was taken, and the award was filed and a decree obtained in accordance with the award. The award could not be modified by the Court, nor could the decree, which must be in accordance with the award. AHMED BIN ESSA KHALIFFA v. ESSA BIN KHALIFFA

304. —Rectifying decree—Practice—Clerical error.—By a written agreement the defendants agreed to purchase from the plaintiff certain land comprising 5,280 square yards or thereabouts at the rate of Rs. 1-1-6 per square yard. The sum of Rs. 1,000 was paid on the date of the agreement in part payment of the price. The plaintiff sued for specific performance of the agreement. The plaint set forth the facts and the part payment, and prayed that the defendant might be ordered specifically to perform the agreement and to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the purchase-money, viz., the sum of Rs. 4,475. On the 9th September 1897, judgment was given for the plaintiff ordering "specific performance as prayed and costs." The decree was accordingly drawn up in terms of the prayer of the plaint. It was afterwards discovered that the sum mentioned in the prayer (viz., Rs. 4,475) and inserted in the decree was incorrect, and ought to have been Rs. 4,775, the latter being the real balance due at the rate mentioned in the agreement after deducting the Rs. 1,000 paid as earnest. On 6th November 1897, the plaintiff gave notice of motion to rectify the decree by altering the figure Rs. 4,475 to Rs. 4,775. On motion to rectify the decree, Held that the decree should be rectified. PHEROZSHA PASTORJI BARDHERIA v. SUN MILLS

309. —Effect of a decree obtained by an attaching creditor in a suit against successful intervenors or claimants—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 240, 270, 271.—In 1872 the plaintiff obtained a money-decree against two brothers, P and K. In execution of that decree, he attached their one-half share in certain fields in 1874. The attachment was removed at the instance of two claimants, S and B. In 1876 the plaintiff sued the claimants and obtained a decree in his favour in 1878. Meanwhile, in December 1874, after the plaintiff's attachment had been removed, one P obtained a decree against one of the brothers, K. interest in the one-half share of the fields belonging to himself and K was sold in execution of P's decree and purchased by the defendant. In 1881 the plaintiff again attached the one-half share belonging to the two brothers under his decree of 1872. Thereupon the defendant, relying on his purchase of 1876, applied for the removal of the attachment. It was removed from P's one-fourth share and maintained on K's share, which was in due course sold. The plaintiff now sued to establish his right to sell P's one-fourth share under his decree of 1872. Held also that, though the effect of the decree obtained by the plaintiff in his suit against the claimants, S and B, was to efface entirely their obstruction to his attachment of 1874, to reinstate that attachment as in full force ab initio, and to restore the state of things that had been disturbed by the order of release, yet the plaintiff could not succeed in the present suit, as the sale to defendant under P's decree was perfectly valid, and P's property, having been sold under that decree, could not be sold again under the plaintiff's decree. Thereupon A applied to have his suit restored to the file and re-heard on the merits, contending that, the decree having been set aside, the suit remained undecided. Held, refusing the application, that A's decree, though set aside, was not reversed. The decree obtained by B left A's decree legally complete, and amounted only to a declaration that the decree obtained by A "should avail nothing for or against the parties to B's suit who were affected by it." *BHIMAJI GOVIND v. 311. ———— Decree determining rights of rival religious sects—Decree whether executory or declaratory—Limitation—How far a sect bound by decree against some of its members.—In a suit determined in 1840, in which various members of the Vadagalai sect residing in a certain village were plaintiffs, and various members of the Tengalai sect residing in the same village were defendants, it was held that an image of a priest revered by the latter sect was not entitled to a place in a certain temple of the village, or to public worship in a certain street, or to procession in the streets of the village; and it was directed that, if the defendants continued to make the image an object of public worship, it should be removed. In 1888 various members of the Vadagalai sect, asserting that the members of the Tengalai sect had acted in contravention of the decree in the above suit, filed an execution petition therein, praying that various members of the Tengalai sect be arrested, and "that the image of their priest, which they attempt to worship publicly, be removed until they obey the terms of the decree." It appeared that in 1868 the District Magistrate had granted an application to restrain the Tengalais from acting contrary to the above decree. The execution-petition was dismissed by the District Court. Held the petition was rightly dismissed, since the execution of the decree was barred by limitation, and the decree, if it was capable of execution at all, could not be executed against the parties to the present petition. SADAGOPACHARI v. KRISHNAMACHARI

5. REVIVAL OF DECREE.

313. ———— Jurisdiction to revive decrees.—In a suit for recovery of a sum of money expended towards improvement of a joint property, the Court passed a decree that, if the defendant would contribute towards payment of the expenses for the improvement, he would be entitled to a proportionate share of the profits. No steps were taken by the plaintiff from 1863 to revive the decree; but on the application of the defendant tendering the amount due from him, and praying to be put in possession, the lower Courts restored the decree, and passed an order in his favour. Held that the lower Courts had no jurisdiction to revive a decree at the instance of the judgment-debtor. *NILAMBAR SEN v. 1. EXECUTION.

1. Completion of deed of sale—Delay in delivery.—A deed of sale is complete on the day when it is signed and attested by the Casee and consideration is paid for it. Delay in the delivery of the deed does not invalidate it. BIKUN SINGH & JUMELA KOONWAR . W. R., 1864, 62

2. Proof of execution—Admissibility in evidence.—A deed of conveyance was tendered in evidence which purported to bear the mark of G as vendor, and which was duly attested by four witnesses. G, however, denied that she had ever executed the deed, and said that the mark was not hers. All the attesting witnesses were dead. A witness was called who knew the handwriting of one of the attesting witnesses, and who swore that the signature of that witness to the attestation clause of the deed was genuine. Held, on the authority of White-locke v. Musgrove, 2 Cr. and M., 511, that the deed was admissible in evidence, its execution by G being sufficiently proved. ABDUL PARU & GANNIBAI [I. L. R., 11 Bom., 690] deed—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59.—Held that a deed may be legally proved by the evidence of the scribe thereof who has signed his name, but not explicitly as an attesting witness, on the margin, and has been present when the deed was executed. Muhammad Ali v. Jafar Khan, All. W. N., 1897, p. 148, followed. RADHA KISHEN v. PATEL ALI RAM . . . I. L. R., 20 All., 532

4. ——— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Mortgage deed signed by the mortgagor attested by one witness and containing an acknowledgment by the Sub-Registrar, whether valid—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 50—Mortgage being invalid, whether a money decree can be made upon the covenant in the bond.—The requirements of s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act are not satisfied when a mortgage-bond is signed by the mortgagor, attested by one witness, and contains the Sub-Registrar's signature to the endorsement, recording the admission of the execution by the executant; therefore such a mortgage is not valid in law. When a suit is brought upon a mortgage-bond, although the mortgage is held to be invalid on the ground that the requirements of s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act were not satisfied, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, upon the covenant, money which the defendant covenanted to pay. TOFALUDDI PRADA v. MAHARALI SHANA . . . I. L. R., 26 Cal., 78

5. ——— Security-bond attested by only one witness—Signatures of the Sub-Registrar and the identifier on the back of the bond whether sufficient to render mortgage valid.—A security-bond, by which an interest in specific immovable property has been transferred to another person for the purpose of securing a future debt, is a mortgage-bond within the meaning of s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, and in order to create a valid mortgage, it must be signed by the executant and attested by at least two witnesses. Therefore, in a case where the mortgage-bond by which the liability of a surety was created was signed by the mortgagor only on the front page, and not attested by two witnesses, but on the back of the bond it contained the signatures of the Sub-Registrar and of the identifier, a suit is not maintainable, inasmuch as the bond is not a valid one under s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. *Nitya Gopal Sircar v. 6. ——— Attestation of mortgage-bond—Meaning of the word "attested"—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 70—Admission of execution.—The attestation required by s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act is an attestation by witnesses of the execution of the document, and not of the admission of execution. The word "admission" in s. 70 of the Evidence Act relates only to the admission of a party in the course of the trial of a suit, and not to the attestation of a document by the admission of the party executing it. Girindra Nath Mukerjee v.

7. ——— Mortgage-deed attested by only one witness.—Where a mortgage-deed was executed, but there was only one attesting witness, it was held not to create any charge on the property, because it was a mortgage within s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, and because such a transaction was expressly excluded from the operation of s. 100 of the Act, and that, the provisions of s. 59 not having been complied with, the mortgage could not be proved. *RAM KUMARI BIRI v. 8. ——— Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 68—Attestation of markman.—The attestation of a markman to a mortgage-bond is a sufficient attestation within the meaning of s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and s. 68 of the Evidence Act. FRANKESHNA TAWARY v. JADU NATH TRIVEDI . . . 2 C. W. N., 603

2. ATTESTATION.

9. ——— Attesting witness unable to write—Name written or mark added by another person.—Where an attesting witness is unable to write, and either makes a mark or has his name written for him in a deed, the style of execution of the attestation cannot invalidate the deed. *AGUM MISRA v. R., 3 Cal., 463, is that, though the mere attestation of a deed by a relative does not necessarily import concurrence, yet where it is shown by other evidence that, when becoming an attesting witness, he must have fully understood what the transaction was, his attestation may support the inference that he was a consenting party. The question whether attestation of a document should be held to imply assent is a question of fact which has to be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case. The said A and B shall be at liberty to make joint-collection with me, and to receive and enjoy in perpetuity Rs. 600; or upon division and partition of as much land as may yield to them Rs. 600, to make separate collection as from their own property. If in any way by sale, etc., the said mouzah shall cease to be my property, I agree to set apart, upon partition and division for A and B, as much land as may yield Rs. 600 in another of the mouzahs owned by me exclusively, and to that also the same conditions as above shall be applicable." A applied to have his name registered as owner of a share in the mouzah sufficient to yield an income of Rs. 300 per annum. 31. — Maxim, Expressio unius est exclusio alterius—Mistake in deed—Suit to reform deed.—The plaintiff sold to the defendant a field containing a well; tax was payable to Government on the field as well as a tax on the well. The deed of sale expressly provided for the payment of the tax on the field by the defendant, but was silent as to the tax on the well. Government recovered the amount of the tax on the well from the plaintiff for 1871, as the well stood entered in the Government books in the plaintiff's name. The plaintiff sued to recover the amount from the defendant. Held that, under the deed of sale, the defendant was not liable to reimburse the plaintiff the amount paid by him to Government. Held also that, if the omission in the deed of sale to provide for the payment of the tax on the well by the defendant should have arisen from a mistake, his only remedy was a suit for

32. — Mistake in boundaries in deed—Intention of parties.—Where by mistake a part only of the premises intended to be mortgaged is described in the deed, and would alone pass under a bill of sale in execution to the auction-purchaser, Held that the Court ought to interfere for the rectification of the instrument, and that, regard being had to the intention and subsequent dealings of the agreeing parties, it ought to be construed as if it had expressly and fully mortgaged and conveyed the entire premises in question. PUDDOMONER DOSSEH v. 33. — "Faali year"—"Agricultural year"—N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 3, cl. 8—Inconsistent clause.—The practice, adopted by patwaris in some parts of the North-Western Provinces, of applying the term "faali year" to the "agricultural year" as defined in Act XIX of 1873, s. 3, cl. 8, is erroneous. Where parties to a deed describe a date as being in such and such a "faali" year, they must be taken, in absence of evidence of mutual mistake, to refer to the calendar faali year. In interpreting a document, a clause which is inconsistent in any construction thereof with the remaining provisions of the document must be rejected. Yad Ram v. Amir Singh, W. N. All. 34. — Construction of raziinama disposing of estate with words "naslan bad naslan."—In cases decided on the construction of documents, in which the expressions mokurari, istemrari, istemrari mokurari, have been considered upon the question whether an absolute interest has been conferred by such documents, or not, it has been taken for certain that, if the words "naslan bad naslan" had been added, an absolute interest would have been clearly conferred. Accordingly, in construing a raziinama between parties dividing family estate and expressly declaring that the shares should descend "naslan bad naslan," Held that the insertion of these words was conclusive in itself; the expressed object of this raziinama pointing to the same construction, viz., that the estate taken under it was absolute. HABIBAH BAKSH v. (as malikana), which he has agreed to pay." M mortgaged the property to B, who obtained possession; and after the mortgage, the annual payments provided for by the deed of sale ceased. The representatives of the vendor sued M and B to recover arrears of malikana. Held that the words "as malikana" in the deed of sale could not be rejected as surplusage; that they showed an intention that the payment of the Rs25 should be an annual charge upon the property and the profits arising therefrom analogous to that of a malikana reserved on a settlement by a Government settlement officer for a zamindar; that the use of these words was intended to reserve and create a perpetual and heritable charge upon the property; and that the Court was not prevented from coming to this conclusion by the omission of specific words of inheritance. *Heeranand Sahoo v. 36. ——— Debtor and creditor—Assignment or appropriation of rent till payment of debt—Intention to appropriate rent as distinguished from the lands—Aivaj (money)—Usufructuary mortgage—Right to take kabuliats from tenants and make recoveries.—Where under an instrument a debtor allotted to his creditor his aivaj on account of deshpande hak and inam recoverable from the villages and undertook not to meddle till the aivaj was paid, and the instrument did not describe the lands mentioned therein by metes and bounds, but only as being in the occupation of certain persons paying so much rent, and contained a clause that the aivaj of Rs8 (the sum total of rents) had been allotted, and that the creditor might take kabuliats from the occupants and make the recoveries.—Held that the term aivaj, although capable of meaning property generally, must, from the context of the document, mean moneys or sums. Held further that the language of the instrument showed a clear intention to appropriate rents as distinguished from the lands themselves. Held also that, even if the transaction were regarded as a mortgage, it could only be a usufructuary mortgage, which would confer no right to have the property sold. HANMANT RAMCHANDRA DESHPANDE v. BABAJI ADAJI DESHPANDE [I. L. R., 18 Bom., 173]

37. ——— Construction of documents of sale and of agreement for re-sale—Sale, with right reserved of re-purchase within a period, distinguished from mortgage.—A document purporting to be one of sale, though it is accompanied by a contract reserving to the vendor a right to re-purchase the property sold, on re-paying the purchase-money within a certain time, is not on that account to be construed as if it were a mortgage. Alderson v.

38. ——— Sale-deed or deed of gift—Mahomedan law, gift.—A deed which purported on the face of it to be a deed of sale contained a recital that the consideration had been received by the vendor and returned as a gift to the vendee. The words used were—"Hath . . . nawasi apne ki hai katai karke sar-i-naman tannam wo kamal waaul pakar bakhsh diya aur hiba karliya." The deed was stamped as a sale-deed and was duly registered, but no possession was given under it, and there was apparently no evidence external to the deed that any consideration had passed between the parties. Held by EDUE, C.J., and TYRELL and KNOX, J.J., that in the absence of any evidence external to the deed itself of the intention of the parties, the deed in question must be taken to be a deed of sale. Per MAHMOOD, J., contra. The lower Appellate Court having found that no consideration had passed, the deed must be considered as a deed of gift, though wearing the appearance of a sale-deed, and, possession not having been given, under Mahomedan law the gift was invalid. ARGAN LAL v. MUHAMMAD HUSAIN [I. L. R., 13 All., 406]

39. ——— Deeds releasing future and contingent interests—Agreement excluding a possible question between the parties as to the effect of words in a will, under which they took their rights.—Three brothers, under their father's will, were entitled, each on attaining full age, to the testator's residuary estate in equal shares. When all had attained full age, two having been minors at the testator's death, they effected a separation of their interests derived from the will, and executed to one another instruments of compromise and partition containing words relating to possible claims which they gave up. One of the two younger brothers afterwards died, having taken, under the will of the other younger one, all the estate of the latter, who had died without issue before him. The eldest then attempted to raise the question whether, on the one hand, the brothers had taken under their fathers' will absolute interests, or on the other, interests that were divested, and went over to a surviving brother in the event of death without issue. As to this, the Court below differed, but the Appellate Court decided, and on this appeal the decision was affirmed, that the above instruments relinquished future demands, this claim included, relating to the brothers' estates under their father's will. GREENDER CHUNDER GHOSH v. TROTLOCKHO NATH GHOSH [I. L. R., 20 Cal., 373]

40. ——— Title under a will followed by a family arrangement adding to the property devised.—The will of a proprietor, who died in 1864, disposed of a zamindari, and of one village within it, as two distinct properties, giving the zamindari to the testator's two widows, and, on the other hand, giving the village in equal shares, in perpetuity, to the two brothers of his junior wife. Neither of the two brothers took possession of their respective moieties on the testator's death, and the whole village was treated for some time as part of the zamindari, the profits of it being received by, or on behalf of, the widows. In 1869 one of the brothers having died, leaving a son, who succeeded to his rights in the village, a family arrangement was made that the entirety of it should be made over to the surviving brother, the present claimant, the son of the other receiving from the widows satisfaction in lieu of his moiety. The junior widow having died, the senior got possession of the village, alleging that the surviving brother had merely been appointed to act as manager of it on behalf of herself and her co-widow. Held that under the will the claimant had been originally entitled to one-half of the village including its rents, from the testator's death; and that to this half had been added the other, with title, in 1869, in pursuance of the transaction in regard to it. An order given by the widows in that year making over the village was not a revocable one; and the interest in the additional half conferred upon the claimant was commensurate with what was already his own. No writing was then necessary to vest the other half in him. Such a transaction was good and valid as a family arrangement; and he had made out his title to the whole village.

41. ——— Trust—Beneficiary—Proviso for forfeiture of interest in case of insolvency—Insolvency and withdrawal of petition in insolvency.—By a deed of settlement executed by the plaintiff's father, certain property was conveyed to trustees upon trust to recover the income thereof and to pay it to the settlor for life, and after his death to his seven sons, in equal shares, for the maintenance of them and their respective families. The deed provided that, in case any beneficiary became insolvent, "or do or suffer anything whereby his share or any part thereof would through his act or default or by operation of law" become vested in or payable to other persons, then the share and interest of such person should cease, and for the remainder of his life should be paid for the maintenance and support of the family of such persons. In July 1894, the plaintiff, who was one of the sons of the settlor, filed his petition in insolvency; but on the 5th December 1894, he withdrew it. Held that the forfeiture clause did not take effect, and that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid by the trustees his share of the income of the trust property. HORMUMI NOWROJI DAVAR v. 42. ——— Sale-deed with counter-deed undertaking to re-transfer land in event of payments being made.—In a document described as a sale-deed, plaintiff's father professed to give, "in absolute sale," certain lands to the defendant, inasmuch as he was unable to pay a debt owing by him to the defendant. On the same day defendant executed a counter-deed in which he referred to the said sale-deed and undertook to get the said lands transferred to plaintiff's father in the event of the latter paying the said debt within a certain time, together with interest till date of payment; and in that event to cancel the said sale-deed and deliver the same to plaintiff's father. The counter deed further provided the plaintiff's father should pay the principal and interest of the said debt by instalments, and that, in default of payment of any instalment, plaintiff's father should pay the whole amount due; and in default of payment in that manner, defendant should credit the land to himself according to the sale-deed, after getting the counter-deed cancelled. Held that on their true construction the documents showed nothing more than an intention to secure repayment of the debt; that though the provisions for payment by instalments and of the whole amount in default of instalments were contained in the counter-deed signed only by the transferee of the land, they were equivalent to a covenant by the transferor so to repay, because, the two documents being parts of one transaction, both parties were bound by or could take advantage of every stipulation, whether contained in one or other of the deeds, as would have been the case if the transaction had been embodied in a single document. Held, therefore, that the transferee had a right to recover the debt (with interest) from the transferor personally; and that the provision entitling the transferee to credit the land to himself in default of payment could not be construed as negating that right. Two documents relating to the transfer and re-transfer of land which were so connected as to constitute one transaction having been executed in the year 1892, prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act.—Held that transaction should be regarded as having been entered into with reference to the law as propounded in the course of Madras decisions commencing in 1858 and referred to in Thunbucamy Madelly v. Hassan Rowther, L. R., 9 I. A., 241; I. L. R., 1 Mad., 1, and that the documents must be construed accordingly. RAMATIA v. KRISHNAMMA . . . I. L. R., 23 Mad., 114

4. PROOF OF GENUINENESS.

43. ——— Mode of proof—Evidence as to similarity of handwriting.—When it becomes necessary to establish the genuineness of a writing, the testimony of the writer or of some person who saw the paper or signature written is not, as a matter of law, the only mode of proof. Evidence as to the similarity of handwriting is just as good in point of admissibility as the testimony of the subscribing witnesses. GAIR CHUNDER ROY v. BRUGWAN CHUNDER ROY . . . 13 W. R., 131

45. ——— Inadequacy of consideration—Evidence of want of genuineness in deed—Party wanting deed said to be executed by him declared a forgery.—Where a deed has been proved and attested in due form, a Court is not justified, without any evidence of its fabrication, in finding from such circumstances as inadequacy of the consideration—money that the deed has been fabricated. Where a person asks to have a deed which is said to have been executed by him declared to be a forgery, he ought to present himself for examination.—WISE v. RADHA GOBIND SHAMA 20 W. R., 181

46. ——— Attestation by Registrar and proof by witnesses—Evidence of genuineness.—A finding by a Court that a mortgage-deed has been attested by the Registrar of Deeds and proved by witnesses is a sufficiently distinct finding on the bond fides of the deed. MOORUL SINGH v. MOHTY KOOR 9 W. R., 167

47. ——— Registration of deed—Proof of genuineness.—Registration of a deed does not affect the question of bond fides, nor is a conveyance to be considered bond fide simply because there is proof of its execution and some statement that money was on the occasion actually paid by the vendee into the hands of the vendor in the presence of witnesses unacquainted with the circumstances of the parties and the relation they bear to each other. BHOODUN CHUNDER BUMBAL v. 53. ——— Evidence of intention with which documents were executed to ascertain their bond fides—Proceedings against third person.—A and B, two undivided Hindu brothers, conveyed to their mother, C, one-third share in the ancestral property of the family by a deed of sale, dated 29th August 1851. Subsequently, A sold his one-third share in the joint ancestral property to B by a deed dated the 4th August 1852. In a suit brought by a judgment-creditor of A in 1868 to recover A's half share in the joint property from B and C, the plaintiff gave in evidence proceedings taken by A jointly with his brother B in 1856 against a third person, relating to the joint property with a view to show that the two documents were illusory, and intended to screen A's share from execution by his creditors. Held that such proceedings were important and relevant evidence, in order to test the bond fides with which A executed the two documents, as it was important to ascertain how A subsequently demeaned himself with regard to the property, his share or interest in which he purported to convey by those documents. GIRDHAR NAOSHSHER v. 54. ——— Deeds not intended to operate according to their tenor—Nullity of transaction apart from fraud.—Documents, principally a pottah and a kobala, executed between a Mahomedan parda-nashin lady and one of her relations, purported to represent, the one a patni lease from her of her lands, and the other a sale of her house and ground from the date of the execution. That she received the consideration was not proved, but had it passed, it would have been distributed between the two deeds, which formed part of one and the same transaction. From the acts of the parties it was established that her intent was to deprive her heirs, not herself, and that she had no intention to part with the property in presenti, as the deeds represented that she did. Held that, the latter not being intended to operate according to their tenor, the whole transaction was a nullity. JISUN NISSA v. ABOAL ALI

55. ——— Deed of sale—Evidence that a deed is not intended to have the ordinary operation.—When a conveyance has been duly executed and registered by a competent person, it requires strong and clear evidence to justify a Court in holding that the parties did not intend that any legal effect should be given to it. It needs to be proved that both parties had it in their minds that the deed should be a mere sham, and in order to establish this proof, it needs to be shown for what purpose other than the ostensible one the deed was executed. RANGA AYYAR v. SRINIVASA AYYANGAR

56. ——— Discussion of evidence and its effect—Evidence of want of genuineness in deed.—Case in which evidence was discussed and its true effect pointed out, and in which it was held, reversing a decree of the High Court, that an ikrar-namah relied on by the respondents was fabricated. It was connected with other documents already found to be forgeries, its contents did not dispel suspicion, it was not established by credible witnesses, nor supported by evidence of possession under it. COOMARI BODHESWAR v. MANROOP KOER

57. ——— Alterations in documents—Evidence of want of genuineness.—A person who presents a document as evidence in an altered and suspicious state must explain the existing state of the document, unless there is corroborative proof strong enough to rebut the presumption which arises against an apparent falsifier of evidence. Such corroborative proof will be greatly strengthened if there be reason to suppose that the opposite party has withheld evidence which would prove the original condition and import of the suspected document. KHOON KOONWUR v. 58. ——— Production when most likely to be challenged—Evidence of genuineness of deed.—The production of a pottah in the presence of the party most interested in challenging its genuineness is a fact legally of the utmost importance in determining its genuineness. GUYEN BISWAS v. res judicata; yet (per JACKSON, J.) where the pottahs (about half a century old) were put forward in suits to which the representatives of the present litigants were parties and no objection was raised then or since, their conduct was held to amount to an admission of, or acquiescence in, the bond fides of the pottahs. KAILAS CHANDRA ROY v. 60. ——— Delay in bringing forward—Evidence of want of genuineness.—In dealing with documents which purport to have been executed many years before they are brought into Court, and of which the fact of execution is denied, the Court will not only require credible and satisfactory testimony as to the actual making, but will look very much at the indications of its having or not having been published contemporaneously with or soon after its preparation, and will regard with strong suspicion a deed which has neither seen the light nor been acted upon until after the lapse of many years from the date it bears. RADHAMADHUB GOSSAIN v. RADHABULLEB GOSSAIN

61. ——— Agreement not brought forward in former suit—Evidence of want of genuineness.—Suit for the recovery of a debt upon an agreement which was not brought forward or alleged to be in existence, when the same demand was successfully disputed in a former suit brought during the infancy of the predecessor of the present appellant, who was the son of the alleged original debtor. The respondent having failed to account satisfactorily for the non-production of the agreement before, and the probabilities of the case being against the genuineness of the agreement, the suit was dismissed. KATCHY KULLYANA BUNGAPPA KALAKA THOLA OODIAR, ZAMINDAR OF OODIAR-PALLIAM v. 62. ——— Lapse of time between production and necessity for proving—Evidence of bond fides—Admission.—A sued B in 1841 to recover possession of certain villages in Gujrat. B produced a deed purporting to be a conveyance by way of mortgage by A's ancestors of their six-sixteenths share in villages to B's ancestors. A at first denied the genuineness of the deed, but, the suit of 1841 having been withdrawn by consent with a view to arbitration, took no steps to have the question decided until the deed was again produced (from the records of the Court, where it remained meanwhile) in the present suit brought in 1859 by A against B to recover the same villages. Held, in the absence of evidence to show that the defendants had by their conduct during the interval admitted that the deed was not genuine, or that they did not intend to rely upon it, so as to mislead the plaintiffs, that the time which elapsed must be taken into account, and that they ought not to be required to prove the deed in the same way as they might have been when it was first produced and relied upon by them. Held also that the High Court sitting in special appeal will not examine the evidence with a view to determine whether such a document be genuine or not; nor will it consider the question whether there is any evidence to connect the plaintiffs with the parties to the deed, when the suit appears to have been conducted in the Courts below as if this was admitted. DEVAJI GORAJI v. GODADHAI GODEBHAI

[2 Bom., 28: 2nd Ed., 27]

63. ——— Property after execution of deed treated as vendor's—Deed of sale.—Where it was shown that for twenty years the plaintiff had enjoyed the profits of an estate made over to her by her husband for her maintenance, and subsequently conveyed to her by a deed purporting to be a deed of sale in part payment of dower,—Held that the deed of sale or hiba-hil-awaz was not vitiated merely by the fact of the property being managed by the lady's husband or his agents, or that in the mutiny it was attached and released as her husband's property, and was subsequently recorded in his name. LADO BEGUM v. ACHFUL alias AMERU-OLNISSA 2 Agra, 158

64. ——— Custody of deed—Evidence of genuineness of deed—Ancient deed—Possession.—Where a kobala upwards of thirty years old was produced from proper custody and offered in evidence, but rejected by the lower Appellate Court as not genuine, because evidence had not been given that it had remained in the custody of the parties after the death of their father, and because it had not been filed in any public office, and no mention made of the purchase in the mofussil or at the sudder station.—Held that it was erroneous to require such proof, and to overlook the evidence of possession under the kobala. ANAND CHUNDER POOSHAI v. MOOKTA KESHER DEBIA 21 W. R., 180

65. ——— Failure to prove payment of consideration—Evidence of want of bond fides of deed—Purchase by pleader.—In a suit to recover possession with mesne profits of property alleged to have been purchased by the plaintiff from A where the defendant U was a daughter of A's sister, R, who claimed the property through her son, V, the question was whether the plaintiff had obtained the property by a valid deed of sale. The plaintiff was a pleader, and while a suit was in progress in which on behalf of his step-mother and another client he contended that V had no property at all in the mouzah, he obtained a conveyance from A, whose sole title was derived from V, which conveyance nominally made to S T was never asserted by the plaintiff until seven years later, when he commenced the present suit. The evidence for the payment by the plaintiff of the consideration-money was so unsatisfactory that the High Court summoned him and examined him. Held that it was somewhat dangerous to allow the plaintiff, a professional man, who did not give evidence in his own suit in his own behalf, to be called for the purpose of supporting his case which had broken down; that the plaintiff's evidence as to payment of the consideration-money was very unsatisfactory and at variance with his previous deposition, and that, though the mere factum of his deed was proved, it was not a bond fide conveyance. USHRUFONISSA BEGUM v. GRIDHAKER LALL 19 W. R., 118

5. RECTIFICATION.

67. ——— Rectification of instrument—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 31.—A mortgagor alleged that a sum in excess of his debt to the mortgagee had been inserted in the instrument; but, on the facts, there being no reason to suppose that there was any fraud or deceit on the part of the mortgagee, or that there was any mutual mistake of the parties as to the amount stated as that for which the security was given, a suit under s. 31 of Act I of 1877 (the Specific Relief Act) to have the instrument rectified was held to have been rightly dismissed. AMANAT BIBI v. 6. CANCELLATION.

68. ——— Cancellation of deed for fraud and collusion—Equitable conditions.—Upon the cancellation of instruments of hypothecation and sale on proof of fraud and collusion between the grantee, who had advanced money, and the manager of the grantor's estate, the grantor having been unduly influenced in the transaction,—Held that the condition of cancellation should be, not the repayment of all money received by the manager, but only of sums shown to have been paid to the grantor personally, and of such sums received by the manager as he would have been justified in borrowing in the course of a prudent management of the estate. ASIT SINGH v. BIJAI BAHADUR SINGH

69. ——— Ground for cancellation—Mahomedan law—Plea that the deed was inoperative according to the personal law of the parties.—Held in the case of a deed of gift between Mahomedans that it was no ground for cancellation of the deed that possession of the property, the subject of the deed, not having been made over to the donee, the deed might be, according to the Mahomedan law, inoperative. UMBAO BIBI v. JAN ALI SHAH 1 L. R., 20 All., 486

70. ——— Voluntary transfer—Undue influence—Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), s. 16.—In a transaction between two persons where one is so situated as to be under the control and influence of the other, the Courts in this country have to see that such other does not unduly and unfairly exercise that influence and control over such person for his own advantage or benefit, or for the advantage or benefit of some religious object in which he is interested, and will call upon him to give clear and cogent proof that the transaction complained of was such a one as the law would support and recognize. Where a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relation had existed, Courts of Equity have invariably placed the burden of sustaining the transaction upon the party benefited by it, requiring him to show that it was of an unobjectionable character and one which it ought not to disturb. The exercise of this beneficial jurisdiction is not confined to cases only between guardian and ward, attorney and client, father and son, but the relief thus granted stands upon a general principle, applying to all variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. The plaintiff, who on the death of the widow of his brother became entitled to the estate of the deceased, found himself resisted in his claim by wealthy relatives. He was a man without means. The defendant took him to his house, kept him there, and found him all the money for the purpose of carrying on his litigation with his relatives, in which the plaintiff succeeded. While the litigation for mutation of names in respect of the property was pending in the Revenue Court, and while plaintiff was residing with the defendant, he executed a sale-deed in favour of defendant's brother for the nominal consideration of Rs. 500, or half the property he claimed; and again shortly after the mutation case had terminated in his favour, he executed a deed of endowment of the remaining half in favour of a temple founded by the ancestor of the defendant, and in which the defendant was interested, and the result was that plaintiff was left as poor as he was when he first came into the defendant's hands. Plaintiff sued for cancellation of the deed of endowment, on the ground that the same had been obtained from him by the exercise of undue influence and by means of fraud, and obtained a decree. On appeal by the defendant it was held that, looking at all the facts, such a relation between plaintiff and defendant in the course of the year 1885 had been established as to cast upon the latter the obligation of satisfying the Court that the transaction, which was given effect to by the deed of endowment, was an honest bona fide transaction and one that ought to be upheld. SITAL PRASAD v. DEFAMATION—continued.

A suit for defamation can only be brought by the person actually defamed, if the person is sui juris, and if not sui juris, then under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, by his guardian or next friend. *Dawan Singh v. 5. ———— Imputation on a wife—Suit by husband—Right of suit.—In a suit for damages for defamation, it appeared that the words complained of were spoken by the defendant to the plaintiff in the presence of a third party, and were to the effect that the plaintiff's wife had committed adultery with a pariah and that her children had been born to the pariah. Held that the suit was not maintainable by the plaintiff. BRAHMANNA v. RAMAKRISHNAMA . . . I. L. R., 18 Mad., 250

8. ———— Nature of defamation—Penal Code, s. 499—"Publishing" defamatory matter—Filing petition in Court.—The act of filing in Court a petition containing imputations concerning a person calculated to harm his reputation, with the intention that it should be read by other persons, amounts to making or publishing the imputation within the meaning of s. 499 of the Penal Code. The criminal law of this country with regard to defamation depends on the construction of s. 499 of the Penal Code, and not on what may be the English law on the same subject. GREENE v. DE-LANNEX 14 W. R., Cr., 27

9. ———— Untrue statement—Penal Code, s. 499.—The accused, an inspector of police, was sent to enquire if it was true that one Brojonath was a leader of dacoits. He reported that it was false, and that the Banias of the village were trying to get him punished from an ill-feeling. He added: "I learnt from private enquiries that there is scarcely a woman in the houses of the Banias who has not passed a night or two with the defendant Brojonath." Commitment of the accused for trial for defamation under s. 499 of the Penal Code supported under the circumstances of the case. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF RAJNARAIN SHIN 6 B. L. R., Ap., 42

10. ———— Expression of suspicion—Slander by a railway guard—De minimis non curat lex.—A railway guard, having reason to suppose that a passenger travelling by a certain train from Madras to Chingleput had purchased his ticket at an intermediate station, called upon the plaintiff and others of the passengers to produce their tickets. As a reason for demanding the production of the plaintiff's ticket, he said to him in the presence of the other passengers, "I suspect you are travelling with a wrong (or false) ticket," which was the defamation complained of. The guard was held to have spoken the above words bona fide. Held the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for damages. SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. RAMAKRISHNA [I. L. R., 13 Mad., 34

11. ———— Penal Code, s. 499, except. 10—Privilege—"Mala fides."—The complainant, a Brahman, who had been put out of caste, was re-admitted by the executive committee of the caste after performing expiatory ceremonies. This re-admission was not approved of by the accused, who formed a faction of the caste; and they, after an interval of six months, distributed in the bazaar to all classes of the public printed papers in which the complainant was described as a doshi or sinner, which signified that he was a person unfit to be associated with. The accused were charged with the offence of defamation. They pleaded privilege, and it was admitted that they had acted without malice. Held that the accused had not acted in good faith, and that the publication was not under the circumstances privileged and protected by Penal Code, s. 499, except. 10, and that the accused were accordingly guilty of defamation. THIAGARAYA v. KRISHNASAMI [I. L. R., 15 Mad., 214

12. ———— Privileged communication—Excommunication from caste—Presumption of bona fides.—Plaintiff was a Hindu widow of the Mudh Wania caste. Defendant was the head of the caste. He received anonymous letters imputing bad conduct to the plaintiff. He was requested to call a caste meeting to consider the matter; he did so, and placed the letters before the meeting, and it was then resolved to warn the plaintiff. The warning was, however, unheeded. So a second meeting was called by the defendant. Plaintiff sent her brother and sister's husband to the meeting in order that they might defend her. But they offered no explanation on her behalf. Witnesses were then heard and ten persons selected to decide what should be done. Defendant was one of those ten, and he communicated to the general meeting the decision they had come to—namely, that the plaintiff should be excommunicated. The meeting unanimously adopted this decision, and the defendant announced the decision of the caste to the gor for him to promulgate. The plaintiff thereupon sued to recover from the defendant Rs. 249 as damages for defamation. Held that the defendant was not guilty of defamation. He acted in the matter honestly, and as he was bound to act in the interests of the caste, and in the discharge of his duties as leader of the caste. PER BANADE, J.—The defendant's act was privileged. Defendant was the head of the caste, and the caste men assembled were interested in the matter along with the defendant. Anonymous letters were received and the defendant had a duty to perform. The matter was discussed at a properly convened meeting, where the plaintiff's near relations were duly summoned and were in fact present. The occasion was lawful and properly exercised to protect mutual interests. The privilege was, therefore, complete, and good faith was to be presumed, unless express malice could be shown. KESHAVLAL v. BAI GIRJA

12. ————— Good faith—

Privilege—Letter written by guru outcasting member of his caste—Penal Code, s. 499.—B, the guru or spiritual guide of the caste to which K belonged, issued a letter or ajna patra to K's fellow-villagers to the effect that, as K's wife had been caught with a man of a lower caste, no one of her co-religionists should have any social intercourse with her, and in effect that she should be outcasted. K proceeded against B for defamation, and B pleaded that the statements contained in the letter were privileged, having been made in good faith and for the public good, and that the case came within one of the exceptions to s. 499 of the Penal Code. It was admitted by K that B had no enmity towards him or his wife, and that it was the custom of the guru to settle such matters as those that had arisen in connection with his wife, and it was proved that the letter was issued after B had made an inquiry into the truth of the allegation. The lower Court convicted. Held that the conviction was wrong, it being clear that the statements contained in the letter had been made in good faith for the protection of the social and spiritual interests of the community of which B was the guru, and that, so far as they implied a censure on the conduct of K's wife, they were justified by the authority with which B was vested as spiritual head of the community, and that therefore the case came within the seventh exception to s. 499. BARUNATI ADHIKARI v. 14. ————— Publishing order of priest excommunicating person from caste—Privileged communication.—The gomashta of a guru or priest was convicted of defamation for having published an order of his master excommunicating the complainant from his caste. The letter publishing the excommunication was a statement that complainant disobeyed some one and treated him with disrespect. Held that the letter contained no expressions defamatory per se. If the person so treated was in a position entitling him to demand submission, and to make non-submission an offence, then that position would render the communication privileged; and if not, then the mere statement that the complainant did not obey one whom he was not bound to obey was not a defamatory imputation. ANONYMOUS [6 Mad., Ap., 47]

S, his guru, or spiritual superior, published a notice declaring N to be an outcaste, and forbidding the disciples of S and the public of the town in which N lived to associate with N, until he submitted to the prescribed penance and obtained a certificate of purification from S. S also sent by post a registered post-card of similar purport to N. In consequence of the interdict of S, N was prevented from performing vows in the temple, lost the society of his relatives, and was otherwise damaged. N charged S with criminal intimidation, intimidation by attempt to induce a belief that by an act of the offender the person intimidated will become an object of divine displeasure, and defamation. Held that the first two charges were unfounded, but that S, by communicating the sentence of excommunication by a registered post-card to N, was guilty of defamation. QUEEN v. 16. ————— Illegal declaration that one is outcasted.—According to the usage of certain Nambudris, a caste enquiry is held when a Nambudri woman is suspected of adultery, and if she is found guilty, she and her paramour are put out of caste. An enquiry was held into the conduct of a certain woman so suspected; she confessed that the plaintiff had had illicit intercourse with her, and thereupon they were both declared outcastes, the plaintiff not having been charged nor having had an opportunity to cross-examine the woman or to enter on his defence and otherwise to vindicate his character. In a suit for damages for defamation by the plaintiff against those who had declared him an outcaste, — Held the declaration that the plaintiff was an outcaste was illegal, and it having been found that the defendants had not acted bona fide in making that declaration, the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages. VALLABHA v. Where the accused in a case of defamation intends to bring evidence to prove the truth of the defamatory matter, his advocate should cross-examine the complainant upon every matter upon which evidence is intended to be brought. 23. ———— Penal Code—(Act XLV of 1860), ss. 499 (except. 9) and 500—Privilege of counsel or pleader—Prosecution by witness—Construction of statute.—A pleader, in addressing a mamlatdar on behalf of his client, who was charged under s. 125 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) with wilfully removing boundary marks, commented on some of the witnesses for the prosecution, and called them losers. Thereupon one of those witnesses prosecuted the pleader for defamation. The Magistrate held that there was no justification for the offence, and convicted the pleader, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 15 under s. 500 of the Penal Code. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that in the absence of express malice (which was not to be presumed) the pleader was protected by except. 9 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. Held also that, in considering whether there was good faith (i.e., due care and attention), the position of the person making the imputation must be taken into consideration. In the case of an advocate, where express malice is absent, a Court having due regard to public policy would be extremely cautious before depriving him of the protection of except. 9 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. Semble—s. 499 of the Penal Code should be construed without reference to the English law. IN RE NAGARIJI TRIKAMJI . *I. The editor having been convicted by the Magistrate, the Sessions Court on appeal quashed the conviction on the ground that there was no evidence that the editor was the writer of the libel or permitted its publication. Held that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the declaration was prima facie proof of publication by the editor. Held also that it would be a sufficient answer to the charge if the editor proved that the libel was published in his absence and without his knowledge, and that he had in good faith entrusted the temporary management of the newspaper during his absence to a competent person. RAMASAMI v. 27. — Newspaper criticism on advertisement—Penal Code, s. 499—Publication—Liability of publisher of newspaper.—M, a medical man and editor of a medical journal published monthly, said in such journal of an advertisement published by H, another medical man, in which H solicited the public to subscribe to a hospital of which he was the surgeon in charge, stating the number of successful operations which had been performed,—"The advertiser is certainly entitled to be congratulated on this marvellous success; but it is hardly consistent with the feelings and usages of the medical profession to herald them forth in this fashion. We are not surprised to find that the line he has elected to adopt has not met with the approval of his brother officers serving in the same province, and we have no hesitation in pronouncing his proceedings in this matter unprofessional." Held that, inasmuch as such advertisement had the effect of making such hospital a "public question," and of submitting it to the "judgment of the public," and M had expressed himself in good faith, M was within the third and sixth exceptions, respectively, to s. 499 of the Penal Code. Held also that M came within the ninth exception to that section. 28. — Ambiguous expressions—Intentions—Penal Code, s. 499—Good faith.—C was put out of caste by a panchayat of his caste-fellows on the ground that there was an improper intimacy between him and a woman of his caste. Certain persons, members of such panchayat, circulated a letter to the members of their caste generally, in which, stating that C and such woman had been put out of caste, and the reason for the same, and requesting the members of the caste not to receive them into their houses or to eat with them, they made certain statements applying equally to C or such woman. Such statements were defamatory within the meaning of s. 499 of the Penal Code.

Held that, if such persons were careless enough to use language which was applicable to C, they did so at their peril, and they could not escape the responsibility of having defamed C by saying that they intended such language to apply to such woman. Held also, on the question whether such persons had acted in good faith, that, looking to the character of such letter, the circumstances under which it was written, and to the fact that C had been put out of caste for the reason alleged, had such persons contented themselves with announcing the determination of the panchayat, and the grounds upon which such determination was based, they would have been protected; but, inasmuch as they did not so content themselves, but went further and made false and uncalled-for statements regarding C, they had rightly been held not to have acted in good faith. *EMPRESS OF INDIA v. 31. — Statements in judicial proceeding—Good faith—Privileged communication.—The law of defamation which should be applied in suits in India for defamation is that laid down in the Penal Code, and not the English law of libel and slander. Held, therefore, that defamatory statements are not privileged merely because they are used in a petition preferred in a judicial proceeding. It is not essential that, before a person can be held entitled to the privilege of having made a statement in good faith for the protection of his interests, he should establish that every word he has spoken or written is literally true. If, having regard to facts and circumstances within his knowledge, he might, as an ordinarily reasonable and prudent man, have drawn the conclusions which he has expressed in defamatory language for the protection of his own interests, he may fairly be held to have made out his good faith. *ABDUL HAKIM v. 35. — True statement but not made in good faith or for the public good—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499, excepts. 2 and 3.—The accused person, an editor of a newspaper, published an article in which the following passage, admittedly referring to the complainant, occurred: "Has his (the complainant's) character been enquired into? Does no one remember that this very man was sent by the Subordinate Judge of Sholapur to be prosecuted? Are not the proceedings instituted by the Subordinate Judge to be found on the record?" The Magistrate found that it was literally true that the complainant had been sent to be prosecuted, but that it was also true that the prosecution had, to the accused's knowledge, been ordered to be withdrawn by the District Judge. Held that, although the statement contained only the truth, it was incomplete and misleading; and that, as the accused was well aware that the prosecution referred to had been withdrawn and did not injuriously affect the complainant's character, he could not plead that the imputation made by him on the complainant's character was made in good faith, or for the public good. EMPERESS v. 37. — Defamatory statement made by a person examined in the course of an official or departmental inquiry—Witness—Privilege—Qualified privilege—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), ss. 191 and 197—Penal Code (XLV of 1860), ss. 211 and 500—Falsely charging a person with an offence.—The complainant was Deputy Collector and first class Magistrate of Bijapur. Certain petitions said to emanate from the accused were received by Government charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteath, Collector and Magistrate of the district, to enquire into the matter. Mr. Monteath enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteath examined other witnesses, and reported the result of his enquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation under s. 500 of the Penal Code in having stated to Mr. Monteath, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him. The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500, and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge. On appeal the Joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that in making the statement to Mr. Monteath, the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under except. 3 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. He therefore reversed the conviction under s. 211 and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code. Against this order of acquittal, Government appealed to the High Court. Held that the accused was guilty of defamation. Held also that, in the absence of sanction from Government, the inquiry held by Mr. Monteath, the District Magistrate, was not a "taking cognizance" of the offence. Held further that, as Mr. Monteath was not sitting as a "Court" when he made the inquiry and examined the accused, the accused was not entitled to claim an absolute protection from a charge of defamation as a witness in a judicial proceeding. The accused was only entitled to a qualified privilege depending on the exceptions to s. 499 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. KARIGOWDA to s. 499 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), it is sufficient to show that the imputation was made in good faith and for the protection of the interest of the accused. Any one in the transaction of business with another has a right to use language bona fide which is relevant to that business, and which a due regard to his own interest makes necessary, even if it should directly or by its consequences be injurious or painful to another. The complainant P and his partner B were owners of the steam-ship Tanjore. The ship was mortgaged to the Bank of Bengal for Rs50,000. In March 1890, the complainant desired to send the vessel to Jeddah with pilgrims and freight. For this purpose he entered into an agreement with S, the agent of the Bank, to pay Rs5,000 to the Bank as a condition precedent to the vessel being allowed by the mortgagees to go on her intended voyage. The sum was to be paid out of the freight and passage-money collected by the complainant. On the 5th April 1890, on which day the vessel sailed, the complainant promised to pay the sum in the evening. This he did not do. Thereupon S wrote to the complainant demanding immediate payment of the amount, and also sent for him five or six times, but the complainant neither called at S's office nor made the payment. On the 12th April S wrote to B, the complainant's partner, as follows:—"P (i.e., the complainant) has misappropriated the Rs5,000 which were to have been paid to the Bank for allowing the Tanjore to go to Jeddah, and is keeping out of the way." Immediately after the receipt of this letter, the complainant tendered the money to the Bank's solicitors. Thereupon S wrote to B on the 12th April, withdrawing the statement made by him about the complainant in his letter of 12th April. On the 14th April, the complainant filed a complaint against S charging him with defamation in his letter of the 12th April 1890. S was convicted by the Magistrate under s. 500 of the Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs200. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the imputations complained of were made in good faith, and for the protection of interest of the accused, and therefore fell under the ninth exception to s. 499 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMRESS v. SLATER

39. — Publication—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 500—Publication of defamatory matter in a newspaper—Responsibility of the editor and proprietor of a newspaper.—The editor and proprietor of a newspaper, who prints his paper containing a defamatory article in one city and permits copies of the paper to be sent by the printer to persons in another city, is responsible, in the absence of proof to the contrary, for the publication of the defamatory article in the latter city. QUEEN-EMRESS v. GIRJASHANKAR KASHIRAM

40. — Reproduction of defamatory matter already published—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499—Dismissal of complaint—Criminal Procedure Code (Act I of 1882), s. 203.—A complaint was filed, under s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code, against the proprietors, editor, and printer of a newspaper for publishing matter alleged to be defamatory. The Magistrate, before whom the complaint was lodged, found that the publication complained of was a mere reproduction or republication of what had been previously printed and published in another newspaper. He was, therefore, of opinion that, unless and until criminal proceedings had been taken in respect of the earlier publication, a charge of defamation could not properly be brought with regard to the later publication. He therefore dismissed the complaint under s. 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act I of 1882). Held that the order of dismissal was improper. The Penal Code (s. 499) makes no exception in favour of a second or third publication as compared with a first. If the complaint is properly laid in respect of a publication which is prima facie defamatory, the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of the complaint, and deal with it according to law. IN RE HOWARD

[I. L. R., 12 Bom., 167]

41. — Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499—Mode of publication defamatory, though the imputation be true.—Under s. 499 of the Penal Code, the person who publishes, and the person who makes, an imputation are alike guilty of defamation. A Court may find that an imputation is true and made for the public good, but on considering the manner of the publication (e.g., in a newspaper) it may hold that the particular publication is not for the public good, and is therefore not privileged. *QUEEN-EMRESS v. 42. — Subject of defamation—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 500 and 501—Construction of defamatory poem—Opinion of experts—Weight to be attached to by jury—Intention.—In a prosecution for libel under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code, where the subject-matter of the defamation was contained in a poem published in a newspaper, and purporting to be a contribution, the accused, who was the editor, printer, and publisher of the newspaper, refused to give up the name of his correspondent, and took the plea that the poem was a satire on ultra purists, and did not refer to any individual, and that some of the stanzas contained in the poem would be inconsistent, if the poem were read as referring to an individual, and that, therefore, the construction for which the prosecution contended would involve illogicalities, and in support of his plea the accused examined several witnesses as experts, the Court charged the jury to the following effect:—That the jury must look at the whole poem and must take it as a whole, and that they must read the poem as reasonable men and should see whether it was reasonably capable of the construction put by the prosecution. That it was not necessary that the whole world should read it as a libel, but the question was whether those who knew the parties, by putting a reasonable construction on the poem, would consider it to refer to the complainant. That the opinion of experts was not binding on the jury, for it is with the jury, and not with those witnesses, that the determination of the case rested. The weight due to the testimony of those witnesses was a matter to be determined by the jury, and that that weight would be proportionate to the soundness of the reasons in its support. That the intention has to be inferred from the act itself. The jury must see whether the natural result of the act was not to harm the reputation of the persons attacked. EMPRESS v. KALI PRASANNA KADYANISHARAD

[I. C. W. N., 465]

43. — Justification—Express malice.—Evidence of complainant having previously acted as alleged in the libel—Act XLV of 1860 (Penal Code), s. 499.—In a prosecution for defamation under s. 500 of the Penal Code, the alleged libel accused the complainant, who was a judicial officer, of (i) having, upon a particular occasion, used abusive language to certain respectable native litigants appearing before him in Court, and (ii) having, upon other occasions not specified, treated other respectable natives (not named) "in a similar manner." This latter accusation was contained in a postscript. The complaint filed by the complainant in the Court of the committing Magistrate, and the charge sheet in which the Magistrate committed the defendant for trial, covered the whole of the document complained of except the postscript. At the trial of the case the defendant pleaded not guilty, and also relied on the first, eighth, and ninth exceptions to s. 499 of the Penal Code. The prosecution gave evidence to prove that, in making the charges contained in the alleged libel, the defendant was actuated by express malice toward the complainant. Held, with reference to the terms of s. 499 of the Penal Code, that evidence of particular instances of abusive language applied by the complainant upon former occasions to natives appearing in his Court was admissible, first, as relating to the question what was the reputation which the defendant was said to have injured, and, secondly, because it must be gathered from the document complained of as a whole whether it showed a malicious intention or not. LADMAN v. HENNESSY

[I. L. R., 7 All., 906]

44. — Malice, Want of—Penal Code, s. 499, excep. 9—Good faith—Tampering with witnesses, Imputation of.—The accused was watching a civil case on behalf of his partner. During the hearing of the case the accused informed the Subordinate Judge that the complainant was "tampering with the witnesses," and prayed that the complainant might be made to sit in the Court. Accordingly the Subordinate Judge directed the complainant to sit in the Court. The complainant thereupon lodged a complaint against the accused before a First Class Magistrate, charging the accused with having defamed him. The Magistrate convicted the accused of the offence, and inflicted upon him a fine of Rs 25, or, in default, sentenced him to one month's simple imprisonment. The accused made an application to the Sessions Judge at Thana to call for the record of his case and if he thought proper to make a reference to the High Court. The Sessions Judge, having called for the record and examined it, was of opinion that, as no malice or bad faith appeared on the part of the accused in making the imputation, the case of the accused fell within excep. 9 of s. 499 of the Penal Code, and that the accused had, committed no offence. He accordingly referred the case, under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1862), to the High Court. Held that the view of the Sessions Judge was correct. The conviction and sentence were accordingly set aside. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PURSHOTAM KALA

[I. L. R., 9 Bom., 200]

45. — Onus probandi—Act XVIII of 1862, s. 27—Good faith.—S. 27 of Act XVIII of 1862 required proof of the existence of the circumstances relied on as a defence, before good faith could be presumed in a case of defamation. The onus of proving good faith is on the person making the imputation. Before such person can claim the benefit of excep. 9, s. 499 of the Penal Code, he must show that he has exercised due care and caution. SEALY v. RAMNARAIN BOSE

4 W. R., Cr., 22

46. — Reasonable and probable cause—Malice.—Held that, in cases of defamation, the onus of proving the statement, or at least of showing that he had reasonable ground for believing it to be true, and was actuated in making such statement not by malicious motives, but by an intelligent zeal for the public interest, lies on the person making the statement. ALTAV HOSSEIN v. TARSUDDOOK HOSSEIN

47. — Suit for defamation—Police officer's report—Words spoken in judicial proceeding.—A suit for damages for defamation of character is cognizable by a Civil Court, even though the words on which the suit is founded were spoken in a judicial proceeding. In such a suit a police officer's report may be evidence that the words were spoken, but not of malicious intention. The plaintiff must start his case by showing he was not guilty of the offence charged, and it will then be upon the defendant to show that he made the imputation in good faith and for the public good. MOHENDRO CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY v. SURBO ROKHYA DASIA

48. — Evidence of falseness of charge.—In a suit for damages for defamation of character, the plaintiff is not required by any absolute rule of law to give affirmative evidence of the falseness of the charge. DHURMO DAS KOONDOL v. KOTLASH KAMINEE DORSIA

XVII of 1879, XXIII of 1881, and XXII of 1882—Agriculturists, Definition of—Change of definition between date of filing of suit and date of trial—Jurisdiction.—Some time previously to the institution of this suit, the defendants lived and carried on business as money-lenders at Yeola, a taluka not subject to the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), and while there they became indebted to the plaintiff. Subsequently they removed to Kopargam, in which district the said Act was in force. Both at Yeola and at Kopargam they, in course of their business, acquired land which they cultivated. In 1882, the plaintiff brought this suit against them in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Yeola to recover the debt due to him. The defendants contended that they were agriculturists, and could not be sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Yeola. The suit came on for trial in July 1883, at which date Act XXII of 1882 had come into force, which altered the definition of "agriculturist." The Subordinate Judge held that the defendants were agriculturists, and that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit. His decree was reversed by the District Judge, who held that the defendants earned their livelihood only partially, and not principally, from agriculture, and that the lower Court had jurisdiction. The defendants appealed to the High Court, and contended that the definition of "agriculturist" to be applied in the case was that contained in Act XXIII of 1881, which was in force when the suit was instituted, and not that in Act XXII of 1882, which was in force at the date of the trial. Held that, having regard to the very special nature of the legislation embodied in a. 12 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) for the benefit of a particular and very limited class, it was intended by the Legislature that a person claiming the benefit of that section at the trial should fill the character of an agriculturist as then defined by law. SHAMLAL v. HIRACHAND

[I. L. R., 10 Bom., 367]

1. ——— a. 2.—Definition of "agriculturist"—Agriculturist also owner of the inam villages and a pensioner—Income from villages, owing to mortgage, together with pension less than income from other sources.—Where an owner of inam villages, the revenue from which, together with his income from other sources not agricultural, was greatly in excess of the income he derived from agriculture, mortgaged the inam villages, and thereby reduced the income actually received by him from non-agricultural sources to less than the income he derived from agriculture.—Held that, although his income from the inam villages and from other sources not agricultural might together be sufficient for his maintenance, nevertheless the construction of the definition of "agriculturist" given in the Act, which is quite independent of any such question, could not be affected thereby, and that he must be deemed to "earn the means of livelihood" principally from agriculture, and to be an agriculturist within the meaning of Act XVII of 1879. DWARAKOJIRAY BABURAY v. 2. ——— ol. 2, and a. 11.—Jurisdiction—Courts of Small Causes.—The effect of the extension of a. 11 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), by the first section of it, to all India is simply to impose upon any person in any part of India who brings a suit of the nature mentioned in the third section against an agriculturist or agriculturists residing within the districts of Poona, Satara, Sholapur, and Ahmednagar the necessity of instituting such suit, and having it tried in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction he or they reside. The Court must necessarily be in some one of the said four districts. The word "agriculturist," as defined in a. 2, cl. 2, refers to an agriculturist residing within any one of the said four districts only, and not to one residing in any other district. On the 25th February 1879, a suit was filed for Rs 5 in the Small Cause Court at Nadiad, in the district of Ahmedabad, against two defendants, one of whom was an agriculturist residing within the local limits of the Subordinate Judge's Court at Umreth, and not within those of the Small Cause Court at Nadiad. The Judge was of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to try it under the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and referred the case for the opinion of the High Court. Held that the Act did not affect the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court in the case of a defendant who was an agriculturist and resided in a place in the district of Ahmedabad, and not in any one of the four districts mentioned in the Act. PURSHOTAM LALCHAI v. BHAVANJI PARTAB

3. ——— Time intervening between application to Conciliator and grant of certificate—Conciliator's certificate when necessary—Limitation.—The necessity to procure the Conciliator's certificate before the entertainment of a suit to which an agriculturist residing within any local area for which a Conciliator has been appointed is a party is not limited to suits specified in a. 3 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, but extends to all matters within the cognizance of a Civil Court. Held that such certificate was necessary before bringing a suit against an agriculturist to obtain a declaration that certain property was liable to be sold in execution. In computing the period of limitation for such a suit, the time intervening between the application to the Conciliator and the grant of a certificate by him must be excluded. DURGARAM MONTRAM v. 1. ——— ol. (w)—Application of Act to non-agricultural classes—Special Judge, revisional jurisdiction of.—The Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) is not limited in its application to agriculturists only, but applies to all classes under certain conditions. The plaintiff sued to recover Rs 50 as money spent by him on account of the defendant. The suit was filed in the Court of the first class Subordinate Judge at Satara, where both parties resided. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in plaintiff's favour. The Special Judge, in revision, reversed this decree, and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff thereupon applied to the High Court under s. 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), urging that, as neither party to the suit was an agriculturist, the Special Judge had no revisional jurisdiction in the matter. Held that the Special Judge had such jurisdiction, the suit being one falling within cl. (w) of s. 3 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act. GANESH KRISHNAJI v. KRISHNAJI. [I. L. R., 14 Bom., 387]

2. Accounts—Duty of Court to take accounts in mode directed by Act.—It being obligatory upon the Court to take accounts in the mode directed in the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), which requires annual rests, and that not having been done, the decree was reversed by the High Court on appeal, and the case sent back to the lower Court to take accounts according to the Act. HANMANT RAMCHANDRA v. [I. L. R., 16 Bom., 172]

3. cl. (x)—Suit to recover rent—Question of title incidentally decided—Analogy with the decisions under the Small Cause Courts Acts—Appeal to the District Court—Revision by the Special Judge—Subordinate Judge, jurisdiction of.—In a suit to recover a sum of Rs 30 as rent under s. 3 (3), cl. (x), of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), a second class Subordinate Judge incidentally determined the question of the plaintiff's title to the land for which the rent was claimed. The point then arose as to whether the decision of the suit by the Subordinate Judge could be appealed against, or whether it was open to revision by the Special Judge under s. 50 of the Act. Held that, although a question of title was incidentally raised and decided in the case, still by analogy with the decisions under the several Small Cause Courts Acts, the suit, as brought, was one properly falling under cl. (x) of s. 3 (3) of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), and that no appeal lay to the District Court from the decree of the Subordinate Judge who decided the suit. SHIDU v. GANESH NARAYAN

4. cla. (x) and (u)—Suit to redeem a chattel pledged—Moveable property, redemption of—Appeal—Subordinate Judge, jurisdiction of.—A suit for the redemption of a chattel is one falling under cl. (x) of s. 3 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). In districts in which the Act is in force this clause is applicable to cases in which neither party is an agriculturist. The word "mortgaged" in cl. (x) of s. 3 of the Act applies only to immoveable property. A suit was brought to redeem an ornament pledged for a sum below Rs 500. The suit was filed in the Court of the first class Subordinate Judge at Satara, where Act XVII of 1879 is in force. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for redemption of the pledge. Held that, though neither of the parties was an agriculturist, the case fell under Ch. II of the Act, and no appeal lay against the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Held, further, that the Special Judge had revisional jurisdiction in the matter. KASHIRAM MULCHAND v. HIRANAND SURATRAM. [I. L. R., 15 Bom., 30]

5. Plaintiff—Mortgagor—Assignee.—The provision in s. 3, cl. (z), of Act XVII of 1879 is not limited to an agriculturist who is himself the original mortgagor; so that, where the plaintiff, though an assignee, is an agriculturist, he is entitled to the benefit of ss. 12, 13, and 14 of the Act. ANNAJI WAGH v. BAPUCHAND JETHIRAM

[I. L. R., 7 Bom., 520]

6. Redemption, suit for—Possession of a defendant not as a mortgagee—Suit in ejectment—Appeal—Jurisdiction of the District Court.—In a redemption suit governed by the provisions of Ch. II of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), one of the defendants being sued merely as a person in possession, Held that the suit as against that defendant was one in ejectment. A suit in ejectment is not governed by cl. (3), s. 3 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and an appeal against the decree in such suit lies to the District Court. SANKHARAM v. SHRIKATI. [I. L. R., 16 Bom., 183]

7. Jurisdiction of second class Subordinate Judge—Transfer of case—Institution of suit—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 46—Presentation of plaint.—The plaintiff sued to establish his title to, and recover, a moiety of a cash allowance payable to him from the Mamlatdar's treasury at Satara. The claim was valued at Rs 455-4. The plaint was filed in the Court of the first class Subordinate Judge at Satara, who transferred the case for trial to the Joint Subordinate Judge of the second class. The latter Judge dismissed the suit on the merits, holding that the plaintiff had no right to the moiety of the allowance which he sought to recover. This decision was reversed on appeal by the Assistant Judge on the ground that the Joint Subordinate Judge of the second class had no jurisdiction to hear the suit under s. 4 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). Held that the requirements of s. 4 of Act XVII of 1879 were sufficiently complied with by the suit having been filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the first class. He was competent under s. 23 of Act XIV of 1869 to transfer the suit to the Joint Subordinate Judge of the second class, who was deputed to assist him. MANAJI BAHIRJI v. NARAYANRAO MADHAVRAO

1. Agriculturist.—The Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) is not limited in its application to suits for sums not exceeding Rs 500. The effect of the reference, in a. 11 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, to cl. (w) of a. 2 is to make all suits of the kinds therein described, when brought against an agriculturist, cognizable by the local Courts, and by them only. S. 11 extends to the whole of British India as to suits brought against agriculturists of the description given in a. 2. In a suit against defendants, who were residents at Sholapur, for Rs. 1,947, the price of goods sold and delivered, the defendants moved for a postponement of the hearing in order that a commission might issue to take evidence at Sholapur, alleging that by the evidence thus obtained they would be proved to be agriculturists within the meaning of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Act, and consequently under a. 11 could only be sued at Sholapur. The Court granted the commission, holding that, if the defendants established that they were bona fide agriculturists, they were exempt from the jurisdiction of the High Court. A man must have gained his livelihood by farming, for at least one full agricultural season, to have acquired the condition of an agriculturist under the Act. TULIDAS DHUNJI v. VIRBASAPA

1. — a. 12.—Act XXIII of 1881, s. 4.—Act XXII of 1882, s. 3.—Definition of "agriculturist"—Change in the definition—Effect of a change of status on the rights of parties to litigation—Effect of change of law.—A change in the law does not generally affect any proceeding begun when it comes into force. But a change of status or legal capacity generally operates at once to extinguish, diminish, or vary the extent to which a party may claim the aid or protection of a Court. The plaintiff, who was earning his livelihood partially by agriculture within the districts to which the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) applied, brought a suit for redemption. At the time of the institution of the suit he was an agriculturist as defined by s. 4 of Act XXIII of 1881. During the pendency of the suit the definition of agriculturist was changed by s. 3 of Act XXII of 1882. Held that, if the plaintiff was not an agriculturist within the meaning of Act XXII of 1882 at the time of adjudication, he had no right to redeem on the special terms of a. 12 of Act XVII of 1879, as he had lost, pendente lite, the specific personal character on which the right depended. Shamlal v. fixed in the mortgage deed for the payment of the mortgage-debt, on the ground that the debt has been satisfied. The rule of law that the right to redeem is co-extensive with the right to foreclosure, and is consequently postponed until the time fixed for the payment of the mortgage-debt, does not apply to cases falling under that Act. BABAJI v. VITHU

[I. L. R., 6 Bom., 784]

3. — Mortgagee overpaid—Decree—Suit for account and redemption.—In a suit for account and redemption, if the mortgagee, on taking the accounts, is found to have been overpaid, the general practice is to order the payment by him of the balance due to the mortgagor, with interest from the date of the institution of the suit. The application of the above rule, however, in redemption suits instituted under the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), in cases where the terms of the mortgage contract between the parties are set aside for the purpose of taking the account under the provisions of a. 13 of the Act, would not only lead to the redemption of the mortgaged property, contrary to the terms and conditions of the contract, but would in many cases oblige the mortgagee to refund the money which rightly came into his hands under the contract. The plaintiff, an agriculturist, sued (as mortgagor) for account and redemption of the mortgaged property under the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The defendant pleaded that by the terms of mortgage-bond he was not bound to account, and that a. 13 of the Act did not apply. The Subordinate Judge overruled the objection, and on taking the account found a balance due from the defendant to the plaintiff. He accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the land and the amount. The District Judge confirmed the decree of the first Court. Held that the decree of the lower Court must be varied by omitting the direction ordering the defendant to pay the balance to the plaintiff. JANOJI v. JANOTI

4. — and a. 15.—Suit on bond the execution of which is admitted—Consideration—Burden of proof—Practice—Procedure.—In cases to which the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) applies, where a suit is brought upon a bond the execution of which is admitted by the defendant, no strict rule can be laid down as to the party upon whom the burden of proof rests. If the parties adduce no evidence, the Court must be content with the evidence of the parties themselves, and endeavour, in the language of a. 15 of the Act, to "satisfy itself." If it cannot "satisfy itself as to the amount which should be allowed on account of principal or interest, or both," it may, under that section, direct, of its own motion, that such amount be ascertained by arbitration. Although proviso 2 of a. 92, and s. 102 of the Evidence Act I of 1873, which correspond with cl. 1 of Regulation V of 1827, have not been repealed, the intention of the Legislature in enacting the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) clearly was to relieve the debtor from the necessity of proving failure of

2. ———— cls. (b) and (d), and a. 15—Suit for redemption—Account—Principal debt how ascertained—Reference to arbitration.—In a redemption suit under the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) the Court should, in taking an account, form its own opinion on the subject. As the law stands, a mere guess as to the sum of money actually advanced cannot be made in favour either of one side or the other. If there are no materials from which the Court can satisfy itself as to the amount which should be allowed on account of principal, whether under cl. (b) or cl. (d) of a. 15 of the Act, it is open to it to have recourse to arbitration under the provisions of a. 15. *Mahadu v. Rajaram, P. J., 1887, p. 216, considered. Malaji v. Vithu, I. L. The account was made up, and the mortgagor was directed to pay the sum found to be due within six months, or to be for ever foreclosed. He failed to pay within the time fixed, and afterwards applied under a. 15B of the Act, as amended by Act XXII of 1882, to be allowed to pay the amount of the decree by instalments. Held that the order asked for could not be made. An order for foreclosure, when the time appointed by the order has expired, itself operates to transfer the ownership; and the ownership, having once passed to the mortgagee, cannot be taken away from him by a subsequent order not founded on any new transaction of the parties, except on some special ground, such as fraud or inevitable accident. *LADU CHIMAJI v. The effect of that section must be taken to be an enlargement of the indulgence granted by

s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), but only in those cases to which the latter section applies. By s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court may, after the passing of a decree in money-suits, order the amount to be paid by instalments, provided the decree-holder consents. By s. 20 of Act XVII of 1879 the Court may make the same order in similar suits, without the consent of the decree-holder. In the case of a debt secured by a mortgage, the agriculturist's remedy lies in a suit, not for an account, but for redemption; and the only decree which can be made in such a suit, in the absence of any special provision in the Act, is the ordinary decree for payment of the whole amount within six months, or, in default, for foreclosure. *Hurdeo Das v. s. 15B—Act XXII of 1882, s. 15B—Payment of decrees by instalments—Default—Whole sum payable on default—No second order for instalments—Acquiescence—Effect of taking out of Court instalments paid in under second order.—S. 15B of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXII of 1882) allows the Court to order payment of a decree by instalments either in its decree or in the course of the execution. But it does not authorize a variation of any order once so made. Nor does s. 20 of Act XVII of 1879 authorize a series of instalment orders, each one varying from the preceding. A decree was made payable by instalments, with a proviso that in default of payment of any one instalment, the whole amount remaining due should be recoverable at once. The judgment-debtor made default. Thereupon the decree-holder sought to recover the whole amount of the decree. The judgment-debtor then applied for a fresh order for payment by instalments. The Court of first instance refused, but the Subordinate Judge on appeal granted the application. The judgment-debtor paid into Court the amount of instalments which had become due under the second order. The decree-holder took out the money so paid in. Held that the Subordinate Judge on appeal had no power to make a fresh order for payment by instalments varying the original order. Held also that the judgment-creditor, by taking out the money paid into Court by the judgment-debtor as instalments due under the second order for instalments, did not bind himself to abide by that order. *BALKRISHNA INDRAKSHAN v. ■ —Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act Amendment Act (XXII of 1882), s. 9—Mortgage by agriculturist—Subsequent money decree against mortgagor—Effect of sale of his equity of redemption in execution—Immovable property—Suit for redemption.—R, an agriculturist, mortgaged the land in dispute to the defendant in 1872. In 1875 one D obtained a decree against R (the mortgagor), who was then represented by his widow, the plaintiff. In execution of this decree, R's equity of redemption was sold on the 10th February 1883, and was bought by the son of the defendant (the mortgagee). On the 12th April 1883, the sale was confirmed; and on the 10th November 1883, the purchaser took formal possession of the land. In 1891 the plaintiff (widow and heir of the mortgagor R) brought this suit to redeem the mortgage and to recover possession of the land, contending that, under s. 22 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1872), the sale of the equity of redemption was a nullity. The lower Court dismissed the suit, holding that, although the sale might be illegal, so long as the certificate of sale remained in force, it was a bar to the plaintiff's right to redeem. Held that, the plaintiff being found to be an agriculturist, the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Acts (XVII of 1879 and XXII of 1882) applied. The provisions of those Acts applied, although the decree and order for sale under which the sale took place were made before the Acts were passed. The Act expressly forbids the immovable property of an agriculturist to be sold in execution, and an equity of redemption is immovable property within the contemplation of the Acts. The sale, therefore, on the 10th February 1883, of the equity of redemption in the mortgaged lands was illegal and a nullity, and was no defence to the plaintiff's suit to redeem the mortgage. *MAHALATU v. The plaintiff was an agriculturist residing in the Kopargaoon talukh. He purchased the house in dispute from the defendant on the 30th January 1872, but did not get possession. On the 12th December 1883, the plaintiff applied to be put into possession under s. 39 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) to the conciliator or appointed for the Khatav talukh, where the house in dispute was situate. The proceedings before the conciliator lasted until the 19th February 1884, on which day a certificate under s. 46 of the Act was granted to the plaintiff. On the 20th February 1884, the plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of the house. The defendant pleaded limitation. The plaintiff contended that, under s. 43 of Act XVII of 1879, the time occupied in the proceedings before the conciliator should be deducted in computing the period of limitation. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to such deduction, as the conciliator, before whom the proceedings had been instituted, was not the one appointed for the local area in which the plaintiff was residing, as required by s. 39 of Act XVII of 1879, and had, therefore, no jurisdiction to deal with plaintiff's application. Held also that the certificate obtained by the plaintiff was not such a certificate as is required by s. 47 of the Act. Held also that the want of a proper certificate was not fatal to the suit. As soon as a defect in a certificate becomes apparent, the proper course is for a Court to stay proceedings to enable the plaintiff to make good the defect by producing the requisite certificate.

ss. 41, 43, 44, and 46—"Amicable settlement"—"Finally disposing of the matter"—Instalment—Interest.—The expression "finally disposing of the matter" in ss. 43 and 44 of Act XVII of 1879 means no more than the expression "amicable settlement" in ss. 41 and 46. An agreement for the settlement of a plaintiff's claim to be paid a mortgage-debt at once or to have the property sold by an arrangement for the payment of the debt by instalments with power to the plaintiff in default of payment of any instalment to take or retain possession until the debt has been satisfied out of the produce of the estate is an "amicable settlement," and therefore one "finally disposing of the matter," which, if duly presented, must be filed by the Court. Where the sum due upon such an agreement is partly made up of interest, a provision to pay interest on any instalment remaining unpaid does not make the agreement illegal. VASUDEV PANDIT v. The case being referred to the High Court,—Held that the agreement was one finally disposing of the matter within the meaning of s. 44 of Act XVII of 1879, and that, therefore, the Subordinate Judge of Talegaon was bound to receive it, and to proceed as directed in that section. 3. — Agreement filed under section and becoming a decree—Default in payment of instalments due under decree—Application to make decree absolute under s. 89 of Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).—On the 21st October 1894, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into an amicable agreement before a conciliator for payment of a mortgage-debt due to the former by annual instalments. The agreement was forwarded to the Court on the 21st December 1894, to be filed under s. 44 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879). Default having been made in the payment of the instalments, the first of which became due on the 25th January 1895, and which also was not paid, the plaintiff applied for execution by sale of the mortgaged property. The application was made on the 6th September 1897, and it was struck off the file for some formal defect on the 18th November 1897. Subsequently, on the 10th October 1898, the plaintiff having applied for an order absolute for sale under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, questions arose as to the applicability of the section to agreements filed in Court under s. 44 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act and as to limitation. Held that agreements filed under s. 44 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, if relating to sale of mortgaged property, are subject to the provisions of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. (XVII of 1879). The Subordinate Judge raised an issue as to her status, and on that issue found that she was not an agriculturist. He, however, proceeded with the trial of the case, and on the merits dismissed her claim. She thereupon applied to the Special Judge, who took up the case in revision, reversed the decree of the lower Court, and passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour, holding that she was an agriculturist. Held that the Special Judge had no jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge had found that the plaintiff was not an agriculturist. Having done so, it must be deemed that he went on with the trial only in his ordinary jurisdiction, and the decree passed was one not under Ch. II of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, but under the general provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). By s. 53 the Special Judge has jurisdiction only over decisions and orders passed by a Subordinate Judge under Ch. II. Per PARSONS, J.—It is only when the plaintiff is admitted and proved (not merely when he claims) to be an agriculturist that the Court has jurisdiction to try a suit under Ch. II of the Act. Of this loan Rs 100 were advanced on the mortgage of certain land, and the bond contained the terms of the mortgage, one of which was that the profits of the land were to be taken by the mortgagee in lieu of interest on the Rs 100. The remaining Rs 50 of the loan unsecured by the bond were made repayable with compound interest at Rs 8 per cent. per annum. The bond further provided that the mortgage should not be redeemed until the latter sum of Rs 50 with interest should be paid off. B sued for redemption of the mortgage. The first Court found that the mortgage had been paid off, and ordered redemption on the plaintiff paying Rs 50 with interest, which, under the rule of damdupat, increased the amount to Rs 100. The plaintiff applied to the Special Judge for review, on the ground that he had already paid the Rs 50. The Special Judge did not review the case on that ground, but, acting under the power given him by ss. 53 and 54 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, varied the decree by ordering redemption on payment of Rs 50 only, holding that, as the mortgage had been long since paid out of profits, the balance of such profits should be applied to payment of the interest due on the Rs 50. On appeal to the High Court, Held that the Special Judge had jurisdiction proprio motu under the provisions of s. 53 to vary the decree of the lower Court while not reviewing the case on the ground applied for by the plaintiff. Held also that the Courts, while inquiring into the merits of a case under s. 12 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, had authority

1. ——— Signed balance of account—Evidence.—A balance of account signed by an agriculturist is an instrument which purports to evidence an obligation for the payment of money, and cannot, therefore, be admitted in evidence, unless written by, or under the superintendence of, and attested by, a village registrar, as required by s. 56 of Act XVII of 1879. KANJI LADHA v. 2. ——— Account adjusted and signed by two debtors, one of whom was an agriculturist—Suit against one agriculturist—Evidence—Inadmissibility of unregistered khata for any purpose whatever.—The plaintiff sued two defendants, one of whom was an agriculturist, on a khata which contained an acknowledgment of liability to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, and also an agreement to pay interest. The defendant, who was an agriculturist, was struck off the record, and the plaintiff proceeded against the other, and obtained a decree against him for the amount claimed, the Court being of opinion that s. 56 of Act XVII of 1879 did not apply, and that the khata sued on was valid and admissible in evidence, although not registered. Held by the High Court that the khata was an instrument purporting to evidence an obligation to pay money within the meaning of s. 56 of Act XVII of 1879, which section applied, although only one of the executants was an agriculturist. Held also that under the provisions of s. 56 the khata was not admissible in evidence in any case whatever, not even to enforce a liability against one who was not an agriculturist. DINSHA KUVARJI v. HARGOVANDAS GOVARDHANDAS

3. ——— Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act Amendment Act (XXIII of 1886), s. 9—Proviso added to s. 56 of Act XVII of 1879—Its applicability to instruments executed before it came into force—Statute, Construction of.—The general rule is that Acts are prospective, not retrospective, in their operation. To this rule there are two exceptions—(a) when Acts are expressly declared to be retrospective; (b) when they only affect the procedure of the Court. The proviso added to s. 56 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) by Act XXIII of 1886 is not retrospective in its operation, as it involves not merely a change of procedure, but also a change of existing rights. The plaintiff purchased a house from the defendant, who was an agriculturist, under a deed of sale dated 23rd June 1886. The deed was registered under the Registration Act (III of 1877). On the 1st December 1886, the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the house. The defendant pleaded that the sale-deed was invalid for want of consideration. Both the lower Courts rejected the claim on the ground that the sale-deed, not having been executed according to the provisions of s. 56 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), was inadmissible and inoperative. In second appeal it was contended for the plaintiff that, as the amending Act XXIII of 1886 came into force after the institution of the suit, but before the suit came to a hearing, the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the proviso added to s. 56 by the amending Act, whereby it was provided that s. 56 was not to apply to instruments which were duly registered under the Indian Registration Act (III of 1877). Held that the proviso to s. 56 of Act XXIII of 1886 did not apply, as it was not retrospective. JAVANMAL JIJMAL v. MUKTARAI

4. ——— Agreement executed before a village conciliator—Agreement evidencing an intention to create a mortgage—Admissibility and validity of such agreement—Evidence.—On the 1st December 1891, defendant executed before a village conciliator a kabuliat to the following effect:—"I admit R460 are due from me to the plaintiff (under a mortgage). I also owe him R485 under a consent decree and R469 as a fresh advance, in all R1434. I agree to pay on this sum interest at 13 annas per cent. per mensem. For the same I give in mortgage the property mentioned in the said decree, and also my house at Junnar. I will repay the said money in four years. If I fail, the property should be sold, and the money should be recovered therefrom; should the sale-proceeds fall short, I will personally pay the deficiency. I have already put the plaintiff in possession of the property herein mentioned. . . ." The village conciliator forwarded this kabuliat to the Subordinate Judge under s. 44 of the Dekkan

Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), but the Subordinate Judge refused to file it. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of the mortgage debt by sale of the property, or, in the alternative, for an order directing the defendant to execute a mortgage in terms of the kabuliat, and for a personal decree against the defendant for the amount due. Held that the kabuliat did not of itself create a mortgage, but only evidenced the intention of the parties to create one. It did not, therefore, fall under s. 56 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and was admissible in evidence to prove the contract entered into. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree directing the defendant to execute a mortgage in terms of the kabuliat. MAHADEV v. 1. — s. 72—Limitation Act, 1877, art. 69—Non-agricultural principal—Agriculturist's surety—Contract of guarantee—Contract Act, ss. 126-147.—On the 11th September 1880, a suit was instituted against a non-agriculturist principal and agriculturist surety for Rs 88-8-0, being principal and interest due on a bond dated the 5th August 1877 and payable on demand. The action being barred against the principal debtor under the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 59, the question was referred to the High Court, whether, under s. 72 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, XVII of 1879, the agriculturist surety was still liable for the amount sued for. Held that, although the suit was barred as against the principal debtor under art. 59, sch. II of the Limitation Act, yet the surety, being an agriculturist, was still liable, inasmuch as s. 72 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which extends the period of limitation in the case of suits against agriculturists, applies to all agriculturists, whether principals or sureties, in the districts affected by that Act. See 126 to 147 of the Contract Act, IX of 1872, considered in connection with the effect of s. 72 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, XVII of 1879. HAJARIMAL v. 2. — Limitation—Surety—Principal.—A as principal, and B and C as sureties, obtained a lease from D of certain land, dated 30th July 1880. A, B, and C were agriculturists within the meaning of Act XVII of 1879, and the lease was registered under s. 56 of that Act. On 1st March 1884, D sued A, B, and C to recover the rent under the lease. Held that, under s. 72 of Act XVII of 1879, as amended by Acts XXIII of 1881 and XXII of 1882, the extended limitation did not apply to the surety, even though the principal debtor was an agriculturist. The words "not merely a surety for the principal debtor" (which enact the exception to the extended limitation given by that section) are not restricted to the case in which the principal debtor is a non-agriculturist. The lease, however, having been registered under s. 54,—Held that it was under a. 60 "to be deemed to have been registered under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1877," and that therefore, by cl. 116 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, the period of limitation applicable to the surety was six years from the date of default by the principal debtor to pay rent. KESU SHIVRAM v. VITHU KANAY . 3. Agriculturist co-defendant sued as surety merely to principal debtor on an unregistered money-bond—Limitation Act, 1877, art. 67, 116.—Where an agriculturist, who was surety for the principal debtor, was made co-defendant in a suit on a money-bond,—Held that in his case the period of limitation was the ordinary period of three years, and not the period of six years allowed by s. 72 of Act XVII of 1879. GANESH RAVJI v. GOVIND GOPAL [I. L. R., 9 Bom., 461]

4. — "Written instrument"—Limitation.—On the 7th April 1888, an agriculturist in the Dekkan passed a writing to his creditor to the following effect:—"Receipt taken by V from E, agriculturist. I have borrowed Rs 1,045 from you from time to time for my private expenses. I have passed you no bond for the money. To-day I have taken Rs 100 more, making Rs 1,345 in all. For that I will give you a bond fifteen days hence. I have received the money." This document was duly registered under s. 56 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). In June 1897, the creditor sued to recover the principal and interest due under this document. Held that the document sued upon was a "written instrument" within the meaning of s. 72, cl. (a), of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and that the suit was, therefore, not barred, having been brought within twelve years from the date of the document. Held also that the document was not a mere acknowledgment of a debt, but an agreement containing a distinct undertaking that the debtor would pass a bond for the debt within fifteen days. VASUDEO ANANT v. 2. — Effect of endorsement of—Vendor's lien—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 108.—The plaintiff was a broker in cotton, and also traded in cotton on his own account. On the 27th January 1883, he contracted with the defendants to sell to them 100 candies of cotton, at R200 per candy, deliverable from the 15th to the 25th April following. On the 30th January 1883, in his capacity as broker, he effected a contract for the sale of the same 100 candies of cotton by the defendants to L & Co. at R102 per candy. L & Co. sold the cotton to D, and D again sold it back to the defendants at R191 per candy. The defendants then sold it to H, by whom it was sold to K, and K finally sold it to B & Co. at R191 per candy. B & Co. obtained possession of the cotton from the plaintiff on or about the 24th April on payment of R191 per candy, for which they had contracted to buy it from K. The delivery order for the cotton had been sent on the 20th April by the plaintiff to the defendants, who, immediately on receiving it, wrote to the plaintiff as follows:—"We beg to ask pro forma for survey on 100 bales M-G. Broach cotton tendered by you to us to-day. As we are handing over the delivery order to a third party, please secure payment for the cotton direct, and before parting with cotton, if necessary." The delivery order was then endorsed by the defendants to their vendees (L & Co.), who in turn endorsed it to D, by whom it was endorsed to the defendants. By subsequent endorsements it came ultimately to B & Co., who, as above mentioned, got delivery of the cotton from the plaintiff on payment of R191 per candy. The plaintiff, who had sold to the defendants at R200 per candy and who received from B & Co. only R191 per candy, sued the defendants in the Small Cause Court for the difference. The defendants contended that after the receipt of the letter written by them to the plaintiff he was bound not to deliver the cotton to L & Co., or to any subsequent endorsee of the delivery order, until he had obtained payment of the full price (R200 per candy) which the defendants had agreed to pay him for it; that the delivery to B & Co. was not a delivery authorized by the defendants; that the payment made by B & Co. to the plaintiff was not a payment made by, or on behalf of, the defendants; that the plaintiff's cause of action, if any, against the defendants was for the full price of the cotton; and that, as that exceeded R2,000, the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction. Held that the defendants' letter to the plaintiff was ineffectual to control or alter the course of the delivery order, and that the plaintiff was bound to deliver the cotton to B & Co. on payment by them of the price of R191 per candy. The defendants, having re-purchased the cotton after it had passed through several hands, sold it for R191 per candy to H, from whom it ultimately passed to B & Co. The plaintiff's lien, therefore, as regarded H and his sub-vendees, was confined to the price at the above rate, and B & Co. were entitled to the goods as against the defendants on payment of that price. The defendants' letter, therefore, of the DELIVERY ORDER—concluded.

20th April 1883—however the plaintiff might have been bound to act on it as regarded L & Co., to whom the cotton was sold at Rs202 per candy, and the other sub-vendees prior to the re-purchase by the defendants—could only, as regards subsequent purchasers, prevent delivery to them before payment of the price at which the defendants had re-sold the goods, viz., Rs191 per candy. That price was actually paid to the plaintiff before he did deliver the goods, and credit was given to the defendants in the account. By the English common law a delivery order is regarded as a mere token of authority to deliver; and before the wharfinger has attorned, it does not, independently of statute or custom, enable the purchaser to confer a title upon a vendee or a sub-vendee free from the vendor's lien for the price. The Contract Act (IX of 1872) gives no larger effect, except by s. 108, to a delivery order than it had by English common law, and under that Act [s. 90, illus. (c), and ss. 95 and 98] the giving of a delivery order by a vendor to a vendee does not of itself give the vendee such a possession of the goods as to defeat the vendor's lien. The exception to this rule contained in excep. (1) to s. 108, which provides that a seller may give to a buyer a better title than he had himself where he is, by consent of the owner, in possession of the goods or documents relating thereto, cannot be held to apply to cases where the possession is entirely beyond the control of the owner. *LE GENT v. Delay caused by inability of captain to deliver goods.—Where a purchaser engaged to take delivery of cargo from a ship at a certain rate per diem, and, in the event of failure, to pay demurrage, and the contract contained a stipulation in the following terms: "But should the captain be unable to deliver weightment of the goods on account of the lightness of the vessel, to which I have no objection, but would not hold myself liable for any demurrage,"—Held that, according to a reasonable construction of the contract, if delay took place in unloading, demurrage was to cease so long as the delay was caused by the inability of the captain to deliver the goods; not that the matter was to be thereby set at large, and that there was no longer to be any period under the contract within which delivery was to be taken of the cargo. *GILLANDERS, ARBUTHNOT & Co. v. —Lien.—The firm of C N & Co., Calcutta, had an account with a Bank of which R was manager, under an arrangement that the bank should discount bills accepted by C N & Co. to a certain amount, and that C N & Co. should keep in the Bank a certain fixed cash balance. In November R, finding that the limit of the discount accommodation had been exceeded, and the cash account overdrawn, declined to discount any more bills unless security were given for the amount then due to the Bank. A, the only partner in the firm of C N & Co., then in Calcutta, verbally promised on 24th November to deposit with the Bank the title-deeds of the premises in which C N & Co. carried on their business; and in consideration of such promise, R discounted further bills from 24th to 29th November. A sent to R a letter on 25th November as follows: "In pursuance of the conversation the writer had with you yesterday, we now deposit the title-deeds of landed house property as security against our discount account." The letter enclosed certain title-deeds of which R acknowledged the receipt. R subsequently discovered they were not the title-deeds which A had promised to deposit, and of this he gave A notice by letter on 28th November. C N & Co., on the 6th December 1870, suspended payment, and by the usual order their estate and effects vested in the Official Assignee, who thereupon, finding that the Bank claimed a lien on the deeds, brought a suit against the Bank for recovery of them. Held that the Bank was entitled to retain the deeds as security both for the balance of the discount account existing at the time of the promise to deposit, and also for the bills discounted between the 24th and 29th November. Scamell—The Bank was entitled to hold the deeds actually deposited as if they were the deeds which formed the subject of the verbal promise to R. *MILLER v. On the evening of the same day, the defendant, by way of further security, gave to the plaintiff a promissory note for the amount of the loan, and endorsed thereon the following memorandum: "For the repayment of the loan of Rs. 1,200 and the interest due thereon of the within note of hand, I hereby deposit with the plaintiff, as a collateral security by way of equitable mortgage, title-deeds of my property." Held the equitable mortgage was complete without the memorandum; the memorandum was not a writing which the parties had made as the evidence of their contract, but only a writing which was evidence of the fact from which the contract was to be inferred. *KADANATH DUTT v. 5. ———— Contract of mortgage—Letter stating terms of equitable mortgage, Effect of—Equitable mortgages, his proper remedy.—A and B executed a joint and several promissory note in favour of the plaintiff. On the same day A deposited with the plaintiff the title-deeds of his property as collateral security, and received conjointly with B a part of the consideration-money for the promissory note. Shortly afterwards A addressed a letter to the plaintiff to this effect: "As collateral security for the due payment of Rs. 2,000 secured by a promissory note of even date. I herewith hand you the title-deeds of my property money borrowed and received in pledge of house," and obtained the balance. In a suit on the basis of the documents for foreclosure, or for sale, of the property, or in the alternative for a conveyance of the legal estate, Held that the letter itself was not a contract of mortgage, and was without registration admissible in evidence of the equitable mortgage which had been completed upon deposit of title.

deeds. Held also that the existence of the letter would not prevent the plaintiff from giving any other evidence in proof of his claim. Kedarnath Dutt v. Sham Lal Khetry, 11 B. L. [L. L. R., 18 Cal., 822]

6. Legal mortgage unregistered—Claim by mortgagee, who has failed to register mortgage-deed, to have an equitable mortgage by virtue of deposit of title-deeds previously to execution of mortgage-deed.—The plaintiff having consented to lend Rs10,000 to the defendant, the latter deposited with him, on the 2nd April 1883, the title-deeds of a certain property. On receiving them, the plaintiff told the defendant that he would take them to his attorney, have a deed drawn up, and then advance the money. The defendant applied to the plaintiff for the money before the deed was prepared, but the plaintiff refused, saying he would not advance the money until he was satisfied by his attorney, and the deed had been prepared. At the time the deeds were handed over to the plaintiff (i.e., the 2nd April 1885), there was no existing debt due by the defendant to the plaintiff. On the 6th April 1885, the mortgage-deed was executed, and on the same day the money was advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant. The plaintiff stated that he "had advanced the money on the security of the title-deeds on the same day." He did not say how long before the execution of the deed the money had been paid, but the deed itself recited that the Rs10,000 were paid immediately before the execution of the mortgage. The mortgage-deed was not registered. The plaintiff stated that he knew that it required registration, but that it was left unregistered at the request of the defendant, who did not wish to be "exposed in the eyes of the public." The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to an equitable mortgage upon the said property, and for the sale thereof, in default of the payment of the mortgage-debt. He contended that the loan had been made on the security of the title-deeds which had been deposited on the 2nd April; that he had, no doubt, intended to obtain a legal mortgage, but that he had abandoned that intention by consenting to leave the mortgage-deed unregistered, and had on the 6th April elected to rely upon his equitable mortgage. Held that the plaintiff had no equitable mortgage. At the time when the deeds were deposited, there was no antecedent or existing debt, nor was any oral agreement made that the title-deeds should stand as a security for future advances, nor was any advance, in fact, made until the mortgage-deed was about to be executed. There could be no doubt that, if the defendant had not been ready to execute the deed, no advance would have been made. The money was really advanced on the security of the mortgage-deed, though, at the time the money was advanced, the plaintiff had the title-deeds in his possession. JAITHA BHIMA v. ABDUL VYAD OOSMAN

7. Lien—Mahomedan law—Trust.—S purchased the muttah of E, and paid part of the consideration-money. When the parties came to complete, the vendors had not the title-deeds, but they promised to deliver them in a few days, and arranged that the remaining part of the purchase-money should be retained by the purchaser, and they handed over to him the title-deeds of another muttah called T, to be held as security for their delivering to the purchaser the title-deeds of muttah E in order to perfect his title. The purchaser, on the faith of this, advanced large sums and paid off a mortgage on muttah T. This latter muttah having been sold, S brought a suit to recover the amount advanced by him on account of that muttah, claiming to be equitable mortgagee, and to have a charge on that estate for the advances made by him in respect thereof. Held that the transaction created a lien, and bound the muttah T for the advances made by S. Semble—By the Mahomedan law such a deposit for a security in respect of a contingent loan would be in the nature of a trust, not a power. VARDEN SETH SAM v. LUCKPATHY ROYJEE LALLAN

8. Payment of mortgage-debt by third person at request of mortgagor—Deposit of mortgage-deed and documents of title with such third person at request of mortgagor—Effect of transaction—Equitable mortgage—Right of suit.—The first defendant held a mortgage as a security for a loan of Rs350. On the 23rd June 1893, the mortgagors themselves paid him the interest due on the mortgage, and on the same day, at the request of the mortgagors, the plaintiff paid him the principal sum of Rs350, which payment was endorsed upon the mortgage-deed. The deed so endorsed, together with another document of title, was thereupon handed over to the plaintiff by direction of the mortgagors. The plaintiff subsequently brought this suit, alleging that the defendant had agreed to assign over the mortgage to him and praying that he might be ordered to execute a transfer. The lower Court found that there was no agreement to assign the mortgage, but that the plaintiff was, under the circumstances, entitled to have an assignment executed to him by the defendant. On appeal by the plaintiff, —Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to an assignment of the mortgage from the defendant. But held also, dismissing the appeal, that the plaintiff had no right of suit against the defendant. The defendant's mortgage was at an end. It was paid off, and nothing remained for the defendant to do but to retransfer the property to the mortgagors or to such person as they should direct; but as there was no contract or privity between the defendant and the plaintiff, the latter could enforce no right against the defendant. His remedy was against the mortgagors. When the defendant, at the request of the mortgagors, handed over the endorsed mortgage-deed and the other document of title to the plaintiff, a new mortgage, viz., an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds, was effected by the mortgagors in favour of the plaintiff. What rights that deposit gave against the mortgagors depended on the agreement between

In a suit by the plaintiff it was held that, the transaction having taken place in Calcutta, the mortgage was valid as an equitable mortgage under s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, though some of the properties were situated outside the limits of the town, and that, according to the practice of the Court, the appropriate remedy in such a mortgage suit is a decree for sale. SERNATH ROY v. Subsequently the plaintiff advanced a further sum to the defendants, who agreed that the plaintiff should retain the title-deeds already held by him as a security for the repayment of the further

Under the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872, which came into force on the 1st day of January 1873, the Deputy Commissioner was no longer a Court of Session, but received powers under s. 36 to try, as a Magistrate, classes of cases which formerly he would have tried as a Court of Session. The Deputy Commissioner, disregarding the commitment, took the case up afresh as a Magistrate of the district under s. 86. Held that this was clearly illegal, and

Such prosecution was legally instituted in such Court, and such offence was properly triable by it. Such Court discharged such person under the provisions of s. 215 of Act X of 1872. Subsequently it appeared that such person was detaining such woman at a place in the North-Western Provinces, and he was prosecuted before a Criminal Court of the district in which such place was situated for the same offence as he had been prosecuted for before the Criminal Court in the Punjab, viz., enticing away such married woman, and was convicted of that offence. Held that, although his previous discharge did not bar the revival of a prosecution for the same offence, such prosecution could only be revived in the Punjab Court, and he could not be convicted under the latter part of s. 496 of the Penal Code for detaining an enticed woman until the enticing had been proved, and such conviction had been properly set aside by the Court of Session. *EMPEROR OF INDIA v. — Dismissal of suit against one defendant without trial after first hearing

— Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 82, 45, and 46.—

The plaintiff sued for damages for the infringement of certain hereditary rights claimed by him in connection with a temple. The first defendant was a Magistrate, and it was alleged as the cause of action against him that he had disobeyed the instructions of his superiors and played into the hands of the other defendants by passing an illegal order. After issues had been framed, the Judge, without trial, dismissed the suit with costs against the first defendant. Held that the order was illegal. SINGA REDDI v. MADAVA RAO . . . I. L. DISTRICT JUDGE, JURISDICTION

14. — Appeal from order passed after Act came into force in proceedings commenced before it was in operation—Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (X of 1888).—A District Judge has jurisdiction to hear the appeal from an order passed after the 1st of July 1888 under the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act of 1888, although the execution proceedings in the course of which the order was made were commenced before that date. BAGAL CHUNDER MOOK-RAJEE v. RAMDHUN MUNDUL. [I. L. R., 18 Cal., 400]

15. — Jurisdiction of District Judge to try case which should have been instituted in Subordinate Judge's Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 16.—S. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code does not prevent a District Judge from trying a suit which ought properly to have been instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. Nidhi Lal v. Mazhar Husain, I. L. R., 7 All., 230, and Matra Mondal v. Hari Mohan Mullick, I. L. R., 17 Cal., 155, followed. AUGUSTINE v. MEDLYCOTT. [I. L. R., 15 Mad., 241]

16. — Appeal from order under s. 331—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 331—Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869), s. 8.—A obtained a decree in the Court of a first class Subordinate Judge for possession of property worth more than Rs. 6,000. In executing this decree against a portion of the property awarded, which was worth Rs. 420, A was resisted by B, who claimed to hold the property under a title adverse to the judgment-debtors. B's claim was thereupon numbered and registered as a suit under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The First Class Subordinate Judge who investigated the claim ordered B's obstruction to be removed and the property to be put into A's possession. B appealed against this order. Held that the appeal lay to the District Judge under Act XIV of 1869, the subject-matter of the claim being less than Rs. 6,000. MOULAKHAN v. GORIKHAN. [I. L. R., 14 Bom., 627]

17. — Reference by District Judge to Assistant Judge—Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869), s. 17—Jurisdiction of Assistant Judge on case so referred.—A District Judge referred for trial an appeal to his Assistant Judge under s. 17 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869). The Assistant Judge dismissed the appeal for default of the appellant's (defendant's) appearance on the day fixed for hearing. An application was afterwards made to the Assistant Judge for the re-admission of the appeal, but he refused the application. A similar application was then made to the District Judge. He granted the application, and ordered the appeal to be re-admitted to the file. The appeal was then heard and decided by the Assistant Judge, who reversed the lower Court's decree. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court.—Held that the order of the District Judge re-admitting the appeal was ultra vires. By the reference under s. 17 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act, XIV of 1869, the Assistant Judge acquired full jurisdiction to try the appeal according to the procedure laid down by the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. The Assistant Judge had jurisdiction, under s. 558 of the Code, to entertain the application for re-admission, and his order refusing to re-admit was not subject to reversal or review by the District Judge. The order of the District Judge re-admitting the appeal was made without jurisdiction, and the proceedings subsequent thereto were also without jurisdiction and invalid. SAKHARAM LAKSHMAN v. GOVIND JOTI. [I. L. R., 15 Bom., 107]

18. — Act IX of 1861, ss. 1, 3, 4—Civil Procedure Code, s. 17.—An application was made to the District Judge of Allahabad, under s. 1 of Act IX of 1861, by a relative of a minor, alleging that the minor had, by the acts and with the connivance and assistance of the defendants at Allahabad, been removed from the plaintiff's custody and guardianship at Allahabad, and praying for the minor's restoration thereto. At the time when the application was made, the minor was at Lahore. Held that, under ss. 1 and 4 of Act IX of 1861, read with s. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code, the application was cognizable by the District Judge of Allahabad, where the cause of action arose; and that, even apart from s. 17 of the Code, the minor having been in the custody and guardianship of a person within the jurisdiction of the Judge of Allahabad, that officer had full jurisdiction to deal with the application. SARAT CHUNDERA CHAKRABARTI v. FORMAN. [I. L. R., 12 All., 213]

19. — Exercise by Subordinate Judge of jurisdiction of District Court—Bengal, N.-W. P., and Assam Civil Courts Act, ss. 23, 24—Appeal—Act XL of 1858.—The words in s. 24 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887) "subject to the rules applicable to like proceedings when disposed of by the District Judge" include the rules relating to appeals. Therefore, orders passed under that section by a Subordinate Judge in proceedings under the Bengal Minors Act (XL of 1858), transferred to him under s. 23 (2) (b) of the former Act, are appealable to the High Court, and not to the Court of the District Judge. SONNA v. KHALAK SIKHON. [I. L. R., 13 All., 78]

20. — Reference by a Collector—Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), s. 55.—A Collector is not competent to refer, nor a District Judge to decide, any question arising under Land Acquisition Act, s. 55. RAMALAKSHMI v. COLLECTOR OF KISTNA. [I. L. R., 16 Mad., 321]

21. — Applicability to guardians who had ceased to be such before the Act came into force—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 41 and 51.—The Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) does not apply to guardians whose powers had ceased by reason of their wards having attained majority, or otherwise, prior to the passing of the Act. The word "guardian" in s. 51 of the Act means a guardian who was such at the time the Act came into force. A was appointed a guardian of B's property under the Bombay Minors Act, XX of 1804. B attained majority in 1886. In 1892

DISTRICT JUDGE, JURISDICTION

B applied to the District Judge for an order directing A to deliver to B his property, together with the accounts relating thereto. The District Judge made the order, as asked for, under s. 41, cl. 3, of Act VIII of 1890. Held that the District Judge had no jurisdiction under Act VIII of 1890 to make the order in question, as A had ceased to be a guardian before the Act came into force. VALLABDAS HIRACHAND v. KRISHNABAI . . . I. L. R., 17 Bom., 566

22. — Duty of District Court to hear all evidence—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 13, 46, and 39—Decision based on evidence taken by a subordinate Court illegal.—S. 46 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) does not control s. 13 of the Act, so as to authorize the District Judge to dispense with the hearing of evidence by himself and transfer the whole investigation of material issues of fact to a subordinate Court. Nor does it empower the District Judge to use the evidence taken by the subordinate Court. An application was made for the appointment of a guardian to the person and property of a minor. The District Court sent the application to a Subordinate Judge for inquiry and report, and issued a notice calling upon any who objected to the appointment of the proposed guardian to appear before the Subordinate Judge, who would hear and dispose of the objections. The whole inquiry was held before, and all the evidence was taken by, the Subordinate Judge. Upon the evidence so taken, the District Judge disposed of the application. Held that the procedure adopted by the District Judge was illegal, and his decision, based upon evidence not taken before him, could not be accepted. Baroda Churn Boss v. Ajoodhya Ram, 23 W. R., 287, Shadho Singh v. Ramanougraha Lall, 9 W. R., 63, and Iswar Chandra Das v. Jugal Kishor, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 33, referred to. GANESH VITHAL v. KUSABAI . . . I. L. R., 23 Bom., 698

23. — Appeal from insolvency order—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 589—Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (VII of 1888), s. 56 and (X of 1888), s. 3, cl. (a).—Bearing in mind that s. 589 of the Code of Civil Procedure was passed to regulate the appellate jurisdiction in appeals from orders, the words "Court subordinate to that Court" in s. 3 of Act X of 1888 must be construed with reference to its appellate jurisdiction. Consequently a District Court has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order in insolvency matters, in a case where it has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal in the suit itself, as when the subject-matter of the suit is more than Rs. 5,000 in value. VENKATRAYA v. JAMBOO AYYAN . . . I. L. R., 17 Mad., 377

24. — Appeal to District Judge entertained without jurisdiction—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25.—Decree passed by a Subordinate Judge invested with the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court—Finality of such decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 622 and 646A—Reference to High Court.—A Subordinate Judge, invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, tried a suit under his Small Cause Court powers, and passed a decree in plaintiff's favour. The defendant appealed against this decree, and the Appellate Court, being of opinion that the suit was not of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, reversed the decree and remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge for trial under his ordinary jurisdiction. Thereupon the Subordinate Judge made a reference to the High Court under s. 646A of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). Held that the reference was not authorized by the provisions of s. 646A of the Code, as it applied to a case before judgment. The High Court could, however, deal with the matter under s. 622 of the Code. Held also that, the suit having been tried by the Subordinate Judge in the exercise of his jurisdiction as a Judge of a Court of Small Causes, the decree was final, and not appealable to the District Court, and the District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The only remedy open to the aggrieved party was to apply to the High Court under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887. DIWALIDAI v. SADASHIVDAS . . . I. L. R., 24 Bom., 310

1. ——— Power of—Security for stay of execution.—A had executed a security bond on behalf of K, who had an appeal to the High Court in a case in which the Court had ordered stay of execution until the appeal was heard. The appeal was heard by a Division Bench, and the Judges differing, the appeal was decreed in accordance with the opinion of the Senior Judge. From this judgment an appeal was preferred under s. 15 of the Letters Patent. After the opinion of the Division Bench was pronounced, A applied to the Judge before whom he had made it for the return of his security-bond, but his application was refused pending the final decree of the High Court in the matter. A then moved the High Court for the cancellation or return of the bond. Held that there was no necessity that this motion should have been presented to the Judges who heard the appeal, for it related to matter beside the judgment, and a Division Bench may receive motions from all districts, without reference to the division into groups. Held that the rule of practice, that applications referring to matters which have judicially arisen in a particular district should be made before the bench to which that district belongs, does not divest any Division Bench of the Court of the jurisdiction given to it by the Charter, nor can it be always properly adhered to. AMESH ALI KHAN v. 2. ——— Reference to High Court after former reference in same case.—An order passed by an Assistant Magistrate in a case of breach of the peace under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was referred to the High Court by the Sessions Judge, with a recommendation that the order should be set aside on certain grounds stated, the want of jurisdiction in the Assistant Magistrate not being one of the grounds. The Division Bench before whom that reference came declined to interfere with the order. It was held by another Division Bench before whom the matter was subsequently brought on motion that they were not debarred from entering into the question of the want of jurisdiction, and, as the effect of the Assistant Magistrate's order was to prejudice one of the parties, the order, which was admittedly without jurisdiction, was set aside. RUN BASADUR SINGH v. 1. ——— s. 2—Application of Act—Polygamous contracts under Mahomedan law.—The Indian Divorce Act was intended to apply to such marriages as are recognised as marriages by Christians, and not to polygamous contracts, such as are the unions known as marriages to the Mahomedan law. Such polygamous contracts are not subject to the jurisdiction of the Courts created by the Indian Divorce Act of 1869. ZUBBUDUST KHAN v. HIS WIFE . . . 2 N. W., 370

2. ——— Jurisdiction—Damages.—The High Court has jurisdiction to admit a petition for divorce, where the parties are resident, and the adultery is committed, in the district of the 24-Pergunnahs. Principle on which the Court will assess damages discussed. KELLY v. KELLY AND SAUNDERS . . . 3 B. L. R., O. C., 67

3. ——— Jurisdiction—Dissolution of marriage.—A District Judge ought in all cases to enquire into, and set out in his judgment, the facts relied on as giving jurisdiction to the Court to pronounce a decree of dissolution of marriage. DURAND v. DURAND . . . 14 W. R., 416

4. ——— Jurisdiction—Residence of parties.—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, where at the time of the presentation of the petition the respondent does not reside within the jurisdiction of the Court, the jurisdiction of the Judge and the right of the petitioner to petition him will depend on where the parties "last resided together." WINGROVE v. WINGROVE . . . 14 W. R., 416

5. ——— European British subjects—Jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay to hear a suit for divorce arising in a Native State between European British subjects—Legislative powers of Governor General.—The petitioner, a European British subject resident at Secunderabad in the Dek-

kan, sued for a divorce, alleging against the respondent various acts of adultery committed at Secunderabad. Held that the High Court of Bombay had jurisdiction to try the suit under the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act, IV of 1869. Held also that the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act, IV of 1869, apply to suits between European British subjects resident in Native States in India; and that s. 2 of that Act, which extends those provisions to such persons, was not ultra vires of the Indian Legislature. Stat. 28 & 29 Vict., c. 15, s. 3, transferred to the Governor General in Council the power, previously vested in Her Majesty by s. 18 of the High Courts Act (Stat. 24 & 25 Vict., c. 104), to alter and determine the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the High Courts in India. The power thus transferred was a power "by Order" to authorize the exercise of jurisdiction. But the power so conferred upon the Governor General in Council did not affect the general legislative powers as to matters of jurisdiction previously possessed by him under Stat. 24 & 25 Vict., c. 67, s. 22. Those powers were (s. 6 of Stat. 28 & 29 Vict., c. 15) expressly reserved; and the special power given by s. 3 of altering the limits of the jurisdiction by executive order does not exclude by implication the general legislative powers. To effect an alteration of such jurisdiction by Act instead of by Order is still within the general scope of the legislative powers of the Governor General in Council, although the more convenient course of an executive Government notification is usually followed. Previously to the institution of the present suit, the respondent had left India and gone to England without any intention of returning to India. It was contended that Act IV of 1869, passed by the Indian Legislature in exercise of its power to make laws for persons resident in Native territories, could not affect her. Held that the petition satisfied the Act by alleging residence of the petitioner in India and the commission of the act of adultery whilst the parties last resided together in India. It was not necessary to show the residence of the respondent. THORNTON v. THORNTON . I. L. R., 10 Bom., 422

6. ——— Application of Act—Non-Christian marriage—Conversion to Christianity—Native Converts Marriage Dissolution Act (XXI of 1866), ss. 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16.—The petitioner and the respondent were married while professing the Hindu faith, and afterwards became converts to Christianity. The petitioner subsequently applied for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery. Held that, being a person professing Christianity at the time of presenting the petition, he was entitled to a dissolution of the marriage under the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869). It is clear from the provisions of the Native Converts Marriage Dissolution Act (XXI of 1866) that a non-Christian marriage is not dissolved by the mere fact of the conversion of one or both of the parties to Christianity, and may therefore be dissolved in accordance with the provisions of Act IV of 1869. GOBHARDHAN DASS v. JASADAMONI DASSI

7. ——— Native Christian—Hindu convert to Christianity.—A pariah, who had been converted to Christianity, presented a petition of divorce under Act IV of 1869 on the ground of adultery committed by his wife before his conversion. Held that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition. PRIJAYATAYAM v. POTTUKANNI

[I. L. R., 14 Mad., 383]

8. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court—Adultery committed in India—Place of marriage.—Under s. 2 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869), a District Court has jurisdiction to make a decree for dissolution of marriage upon being satisfied that the adultery charged has been committed in India without going into evidence as to the place of the marriage of the parties. KYRS v. KYRS AND COOK

I. L. R., 20 Bom., 362

9. ——— "Residence," Meaning of the word—Jurisdiction of the Court to grant divorce.—That under the Indian Divorce Act domicile is not the test of the Court's authority to grant a divorce, it being sufficient if the petitioner resides in India at the time of presenting the petition and professes the Christian religion. That the meaning of the word "reside" must in each case be decided with reference to its own circumstances. It conveys the idea, if not of permanence, of some degree of continuance. That the "residence" to which the Indian Divorce Act points must be something more than occupation during occasional and casual visits within the local limits of the Court, more specially where there is a residence outside those limits marked with a considerable measure of continuance. That where the petitioner does not reside in India, the Court has no jurisdiction by virtue of the Charter of 1774 and the Letters Patent of 1862 and 1865 to grant him a decree for divorce. JOHNDRA NATH BANERJEE v. 2. ——— cl. (9), and s. 10—Desertion—Adultery—Judicial separation.—A husband and wife living in British Burma separated in 1861; the wife, for reasons of convenience, going to England, but with no intention of a permanent separation. After her departure, the husband contracted an adulterous connection with a Burmese woman, which was, however, unknown to the wife till 1875. During the separation he kept up correspondence with his wife, and in some of his letters he expressed an intention of never returning to England; and in 1868 expressed his willingness to aid her in obtaining a divorce. The wife never openly consented to the separation, although she could not be said to have made any active opposition to it. Held that the wife was not entitled to a divorce, but only to a judicial separation, as there was no evidence of desertion. Desertion under the Indian Divorce Act implies "an abandonment against the wish of the person charging it," and although the word "abandonment" is undefined, the effect of the clause is to introduce into the Indian Statute the view adopted by the Courts in England in construing the English Act. The expression "against the wish of" is to be construed as meaning contrary to an actively expressed wish of the person charging abandonment, and notwithstanding the resistance or opposition of such person. A wife is bound, when seeking to prove desertion, to give evidence of conduct on her part, showing unmistakably that such desertion was against her will. The decisions of the Probate and Divorce Courts in England must be taken to be a guide to the Courts in India under the Indian Divorce Act, except when the facts of any particular case, arising out of the peculiar circumstances of Anglo-Indian life, constitute a situation such as the English Courts are not likely to have had in view. FOWLE v. 2. ——— Practice—Stay of proceedings—Petition for divorce in India—Suit by wife in England for restitution of conjugal rights.—The petitioner, having (as he believed), on the 12th December 1885, discovered that the respondent had been guilty of adultery, brought her from Secunderabad to Bombay, and sent her to England on the 25th December 1885. On the 26th February 1886 he filed his petition in the High Court of Bombay. On the 26th March 1886 the respondent filed a suit against the petitioner in the High Court of Justice in England for restitution of conjugal rights. On motion made on respondent's behalf to stay proceedings in the present suit until the suit in England should be determined, Held, in the circumstances of the case, that a stay of proceedings ought not to be granted. THORNTON v. 4. ———— Nature of the marriages contemplated by the Act—Suit for dissolution of marriage—Monogamous marriage.—The petitioner and his wife married according to the rites of the Hindu religion. The wife subsequently left her husband, and lived in adultery with another man. Both the husband and wife subsequently became Christians, but the wife continued to live in adultery. The husband sued under Act IV of 1869 for the dissolution of the marriage. Held that, having regard to s. 7, the marriages contemplated by the Act are those founded on the Christian principle of a union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of others, and that consequently the Act does not contemplate relief in cases where the parties have been married under the rites of Hindu law, a Hindu marriage not being a monogamous one. *Hyde v. 5. ———— Rules and principles referred to in s. 4.—The principles and rules referred to in s. 7 of Divorce Act, IV of 1869, are not mere rules of procedure such as the rules which regulate appeals, but are the rules and the principles which determine the cases in which the Court will grant relief to the parties appearing before it or refuse that relief—rules of quasi-substantive rather than of mere adjective law. A v. B

1. ———— s. 11—Addition of co-respondent—Prostitute—Amending petition—Laches of petitioner.—Under the Divorce Act, IV of 1869, the addition of a co-respondent is not necessary if the wife has been leading the life of a prostitute, and the petitioner knows of no person with whom adultery has been committed. Where the respondent was living, not a life of promiscuous intercourse with all who sought her, but living with separate persons in succession, and professed to be able to attribute her respective children to a father, she was held not to be leading a life of prostitution within the meaning of the Act. Where a petitioner neglected for fourteen years to take any steps to obtain a separation from his wife, whom he knew to be living in adultery, the Court refused to allow the petition to be amended by the addition of co-respondents. *ROS v. 2. ———— and s. 15—Intervening in a divorce suit—Allegation by the husband in his answer that the wife committed adultery—Application by the alleged adulterer to intervene.—A person who has been charged by the husband, in his answer to a petition by the wife for divorce, with having committed adultery with the wife, is entitled to intervene. *Wheeler v. s. 13—Collusion—Collusion in presentation of petition for dissolution.—Subsequently to the institution of a suit for dissolution of marriage, and on the same day on which the suit came on for hearing, the petitioner and the respondent each filed petitions, setting out that it was agreed between them that from that date the marriage between them should be dissolved; that neither of them should have any claim against the other; that each should marry again at pleasure, and prayed that dissolution of the marriage might be granted on these terms, each party bearing his and her own costs. Held that this amounted to collusion within the meaning of s. 13 of Act IV of 1869, and that the petition must be dismissed. CHRISTIAN v. CHRISTIAN

ss. 13, 14, and 15—Cruelty—Condonation.—The petitioner sued for a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery. The adultery was admitted, but the respondent proved that her husband had been guilty of various acts of cruelty towards her, which disentitled him to have an unconditional divorce, and claimed on this ground a right to a judicial separation with alimony under s. 16 of the Indian Divorce Act. She was at the time of the suit living with the co-respondent. Held that the respondent was not entitled to a decree for judicial separation with alimony. The Court has discretion, under s. 14 of the Act, to refuse a decree for divorce if the petitioner has been guilty of cruelty, although the cruelty may have been condoned. ss. 13, 14, and 15 of the Indian Divorce Act commented on. GORDON v. GORDON AND SARAH . . . 3 B. L. R., O. C., 126

2. ———— Husband and wife—Charges against wife of adultery—Cruelty.—A false charge by a husband against his wife of adultery, although such charge is made wilfully, maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, is not an act amounting at law to cruelty, so as to entitle the wife to a judicial separation. AUGUSTIN v. AUGUSTIN . . . I. L. R., 4 All., 374

3. ———— Condonation of adultery—Removal by wife's misconduct.—When a husband, having received reasonably probable information of his wife's adultery, has, by continuing cohabitation, condoned the offence, subsequent misconduct of the wife tending to, though falling short of, adultery, revives the condoned adultery. PEREIRA v. PEREIRA AND HOUNJOUR . . . I. L. R., 5 Mad., 118

4. ———— Dissolution of marriage—Discretionary bar—Separation from wife without reasonable cause—Conduct conducing to wife's adultery.—A husband separated himself from his wife, who up to the time of his doing so was a virtuous woman, merely because she had run him into debt. He did not write to her, or go to see her, or make her an allowance proportionate to his income, after he had done so. Held, upon a petition by the husband for dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery, such adultery having been committed during such separation, that his conduct towards his wife disqualified him from obtaining the relief sought. HOLLOWAY v. HOLLOWAY AND CAMPBELL

[I. L. R., 5 All., 71]

5. ———— Conduct of petitioner conducing to adultery—Just and reasonable cause for desertion—Drunkenness of wife—Leaving wife without provision for maintenance.—Evidence adduced at the hearing of a petition by a husband for the dissolution of his marriage with his wife showed that the petitioner had left his wife voluntarily on account of her drunkenness; that he had not maintained her or contributed to her support since so leaving her; that he had no reason for believing that his wife had committed adultery during the time he had lived with her; and that she had (if the evidence were believed) been leading an immoral life since the petitioner had so left her. The petition was dismissed, whereupon the petitioner appealed. Held that the petitioner, having deserted his wife without just or reasonable cause and without making any provision for her, had conduced to the adultery (if any had been committed), and the petition had been rightly dismissed. X v. X. . . I. L. R., 22 Mad., 328

6. ———— Suit for dissolution of marriage—Adultery of petitioner during marriage—Discretion of Court.—The Courts in India will adopt, as a guide in the exercise of the judicial discretion in granting or refusing a decree of dissolution of marriage given by s. 14 of the Indian Divorce Act, the principles laid down in the English decisions with regard to the corresponding section in the English Act (20 & 21 Vict., c. 85, s. 31). The discretion to be exercised under s. 14 of the Indian Divorce Act must be a regulated discretion. The Court cannot grant or withhold a divorce on the mere footing that the petitioner's adultery is more or less pardonable, or that it has been more or less frequent. There must be special circumstances attending the commission of such adultery, or special features placing it in some category capable of distinct statement and recognition, in order that the discretion may be fitly exercised in favour of a petitioner. G— v. G—

7. ———— Desertion.—In a suit by a wife for a dissolution of her marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery and desertion, the adultery was proved, and it was found that the wife, notwithstanding the gross misconduct of her husband, continued to live with him for some years, during which time she supported her husband and herself by her own earnings, he contributing nothing to her support; that eventually, under the pressure of pecuniary difficulties, brought about by her husband's extravagance and dissolute habits, they came to an arrangement by which she went to live with her friends and he resided at his mother's house, until they could again find means to provide a common house; that for two years previously to the separation, though they had lived together, no conjugal intercourse owing to the husband's misconduct had taken place between them; that he left his mother's house without telling his wife where he was going, and subsequently went to Madras, where he had since resided. Held in the Court below, following the case of Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, L. R., 1 P. & D., 694, that the separation having originally been by mutual consent, desertion could not take place until cohabitation had been resumed; desertion not being proved, the wife was only entitled to a decree for judicial separation. Held on appeal that the separation, not being brought about by the act of the wife, but by the husband's misconduct, distinguished the case from that of Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, and that, under the circumstances, the desertion was proved, and the petitioner was entitled to a decree for a dissolution of marriage. WOOD v. WOOD. I. L. R., 8 Cal., 486; 1 C. L. R., 552

8. ———— Delay—Connivance.—Whilst on the one hand there is no absolute limitation in the case of a petition for dissolution of marriage, yet the first thing which the Court looks to when the charge of adultery is preferred is, whether there has been such delay as to lead to the conclusion that the petitioner had either connived at the adultery or was wholly indifferent to it; but any presumption arising from apparent delay may always be rebutted by an explanation of the circumstances. WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS. . . I. L. R., 8 Cal., 688

9. ———— Suit for divorce for adultery—Delay in bringing suit—Evidence of connivance.—The marriage took place in 1860; the adultery commenced almost simultaneously with the marriage. The relief was sought in 1872. Held that, as until 1869 there was no means of obtaining relief, the question was whether the delay since that time had been sufficiently accounted for. Petitioner's excuse was that he believed that after seven years he could contract a second marriage. Held also that the delay ought not to be construed into an insensibility to the injury sustained, and the other circumstances of the case rebutted the existence of indifference approaching to connivance. DEVASAGAYAM PITCHAMATHOO v. NAIRAGAM. . . 7 Mad., 284

12. ———— Marriage by petitioner before decree of District Court confirmed by High Court—Ignorance of law—Discretion of Court to make decree absolute.—After the District Court had passed a decree for dissolution of marriage, but before the confirmation of the decree by the High Court, the petitioner, in ignorance of the law, married another woman, but he ceased to cohabit with the woman on discovering his mistake. Under the circumstances, the High Court made the decree absolute, holding

2. ——— Application to make decree nisi absolute.—Notice.—The parties against whom a decree is made in a suit for divorce against the wife cannot come in to show cause why a decree nisi should not be made absolute: therefore, in an application to make the decree absolute, it is immaterial that the respondent has had no notice of the application. *WILLIS v. 5. ——— Decree absolute, application for.—Decree nisi. Non-service of.—Notice of application.—Practice.—In an application to have a decree nisi made absolute, where it appeared that the decree had been passed ex-parte, after the original summons had been personally served on the respondent and that, owing to this, the petitioner being unable to discover the whereabouts of the respondent, who had left Calcutta immediately after the decree was passed, no copy of the decree had been served on him, or notice of the application given him, —Held that sufficient cause was shown for the decree being made absolute, notwithstanding it had not been served, or notice of the application given, and the decree was made absolute accordingly. HUNTER v. HUNTER. I. L. R., 18 Cal., 539

6. ——— Intervenor.—Procedure after decree nisi on application by respondent for liberty to intervene.—A wife sued for dissolution of her marriage on the grounds of her husband's adultery and cruelty. The respondent did not appear or file an answer, and the case was heard ex-parte, and resulted in a decree nisi being passed. Subsequently, and before the decree was made absolute, the respondent applied for liberty to intervene under the provisions of cl. (c), s. 16 of the Divorce Act, the application being based on affidavits alleging, inter alia, collusion on the part of the petitioner. Held, following

King v. King, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 416, that the respondent could not be allowed to intervene or be heard when the decree came on to be made absolute, but that the affidavits should be filed, and that notice should be given to the petitioner that the decree would not be made absolute until the matter set out in the affidavits as regarded the collusion had been cleared up. *STEPHEN v. 7. ——— Intervenor.—Right of third person to intervene.—Procedure in case of intervening after decree nisi.—Right to move for new trial.—Practice.—Procedure.—Review.—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 623.—Limitation Act, 1877, art. 102.—Motion to make absolute a decree nisi.—Discretion of Court to refuse motion.—Further enquiry ordered by Court.—A wife sued for dissolution of marriage on the grounds of her husband's adultery and cruelty. The respondent entered an appearance through a solicitor, but did not file any written statement, and did not appear at the hearing, and a decree was made for the petitioner on the 26th July 1881. On the 3rd October, T, who had acted as solicitor for the respondent, appeared as intervenor, and under s. 16 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869) obtained a rule nisi calling on the petitioner to show cause why a new trial should not be had and all further proceedings under the decree nisi should not be stayed. The rule was obtained upon an affidavit of T, in which he stated that since the date of the decree nisi he had been informed by the respondent that the petitioner had been, prior to that date, guilty of adultery with a person whose name he mentioned; that he was informed by the respondent that the reason why he (the respondent) had not defended the suit was that he wished to avoid making public the fact of his wife's adultery, and thus injuring the prospects of his children; that application had been made both to the Advocate General of Bombay and to the Government Solicitor that they should intervene as representing the Queen's Proctor in India, but that both had declined. The respondent also filed an affidavit corroborating the statements made in T's affidavit. In showing cause against the rule it was contended on behalf of the petitioner that under the Divorce Act (IV of 1869) the proper course for a third person wishing to intervene was to file an appearance and then to show cause on the motion to make absolute the decree nisi, and that the rule for a new trial was wrong in form. Held that a new trial could not be granted, there being no provision in the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) for the granting of a new trial. The respondent himself could only have applied for a review of judgment under s. 623, and, even if otherwise entitled to a review, the motion of the 23rd October 1881, regarded as an application for a review, was too late under cl. 162, sch. II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. Assuming that a third person had the right to apply for a review of judgment, T's application of 3rd October 1881 was also barred. Held also that under the Divorce Act (IV of 1869) a third person may show cause against a decree nisi being made absolute, but is not at liberty to institute proceedings, s.g., by obtaining a rule, as was done in this case. Held also that T, who had been the solicitor to the respondent, and who was, in fact, acting at the instance of the respondent, was not entitled to intervene or to show cause against the decree being made absolute. A respondent has no right to show cause, and he cannot do indirectly through another what he is not permitted to do himself. Counsel on behalf of the petitioner subsequently moved to make the decree nisi absolute, and contended that, the Court having held that T had no right to intervene or to show cause, the affidavits filed by him should be disregarded and taken off the file, and that, no cause having been shown by any other person, the petitioner was entitled, under the provisions of s. 16 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869), to have the decree made absolute. The Court, however, refused the motion, and adjourned the case, directing that the petitioner should attend personally on a day specified, in order that the matters alleged in the affidavits might be investigated. KING v. KING. I L R., 6 Bom., 416

— ss. 16 and 17—Suit for dissolution of marriage—Decree made by District Judge—Confirmation by High Court—Application by petitioner and respondent that decree should not be made absolute—Compromise.—In a suit for divorce by the husband as petitioner against his wife and another person as co-respondent, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, where the suit was instituted, passed a decree nisi, and the record of the case was forwarded to the High Court for confirmation under s. 17 of the Indian Divorce Act. The petitioner and the respondent, his wife, also forwarded to the High Court, through the Registrar of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, a petition in which they expressed their intention of living together as man and wife, and asked the Court not to make the decree absolute. On the 2nd June the case came before the Court, when an order was passed that it should stand over for a fortnight to enable the petitioners to appear in person or by pleader. At the adjourned hearing both the petitioner and the respondent were represented by one vakil, and he prayed the Court not to make the decree nisi absolute. Held by EDGE, C.J., and BROTHURST, J., that the Court should accede to the prayer of the petition, and not make absolute the decree passed by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. Further, that a suit for a divorce is to be dealt with like all other cases between private litigants, and therefore the High Court should not make a decree nisi absolute without a motion being made to it to that effect. Held by MAHMOOD, J., that proceedings in a Divorce Court are quasi-criminal, and that they are governed by rules in many respects vastly different from those which govern ordinary civil litigation, especially in the matter of compromise or mutual agreement between the parties. Held further that, as in the Indian Divorce Act no express power is given to the parties to the suit to prevent a decree nisi passed in it by the District Judge from being made absolute, the principles of the practice of the English Divorce Act in such a matter might well be followed, and

B, I. L. R., 23 Bom., 460*, dissented from. Assuming the proviso in s. 17 to be applicable to a decree of nullity, a decree by the High Court confirming the same before the six months' period has expired, cannot on that ground be treated as made by a Court not competent to make it, within the meaning of ss. 41 and 44 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and is therefore under s. 41 conclusive proof that the marriage was null and void. *CARTON v. s. 19—Restitution of conjugal rights, Suit for—Marriage, Validity of—Prohibited degrees—Roman Catholics—East Indians—Customary law—Deceased wife's sister, Marriage with.—In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the parties were East Indians, and at the time of the marriage on 22nd July 1877 were domiciled in British India, resident within the limits of Calcutta, and members of the Roman Catholic religion. The defence to the suit was that a previous marriage had, on 6th December 1871, been performed between the respondent and the petitioner's sister, and the respondent prayed that the second marriage might be declared a nullity. The ceremony of 6th December 1871 had taken place while the petitioner's sister was on her death-bed and in extremis, and had been celebrated in accordance with the rights of the Roman Catholic Church, and it was held both by the original Court and on appeal to be a valid marriage.

The first Court (CUMMINGHAM, J.) held that the second marriage was null and void on the ground that the parties were within the prohibited degrees. Held by the Full Bench.—The prohibited degrees mentioned in s. 19 of the Divorce Act do not necessarily mean the degrees prohibited by the law of England. All that was known in respect of the parties to the marriage being that they were Roman Catholic subjects with Portuguese names, and it not having been found whether they were of English or any other European descent, or of native or mixed parentage.—Held that the prohibited degrees for the parties to the marriage were not the degrees prohibited by the law of England, but those prohibited by the customary law of the class to which they belonged, that is to say, the law of the Roman Catholic Church as applied in this country. *LOPEZ v. The marriage took place after the passing of the Succession Act, 1865, and it was contended that, as s. 4 of that Act did not allow the husband to acquire any interest in his wife's property, he would not be made to pay her costs; there was, however, no evidence before the Court that the wife had any separate property, and the application was granted. *BROADHEAD v. 2. — Payment of wife's costs.—On an application by the wife that a sum should be paid into Court to cover her costs of a suit for divorce in which she was responded, the Court ordered the Registrar to estimate the probable expenses of the suit from the commencement to the date of final hearing: such sum was ordered to be paid into Court, the wife's proctor to have a lien on the sum to the extent of his costs. An application that the amount estimated should be paid out of Court to her was refused; but the Court granted an application that the respondent's costs incurred should be taxed, and the amount thereof be paid out of Court to her proctor. *KELLY v. petition, which the respondent's attorneys would not agree to, the Court granted the application, so far as to direct that the costs of the petitioner's attorney, when taxed, should be paid by the respondent, but refused to make any order for the withdrawal or other final disposal of the suit, and ordered that the attorney should personally bear the costs of the application. *P—v. The principle upon which the Divorce Court in England acts, in requiring the husband, in a suit for judicial separation, to provide for his wife's costs, is based upon the absolute right which the law formerly gave the husband upon marriage to the whole of his wife's personal estate, and to the income of her real estate, leaving her destitute of all means to conduct her case; but this state of the law has been completely altered in India by s. 4 of the Succession Act, which prevents any person from acquiring, or losing, rights in respect of property by marriage. *PROBY v. The Court made an order directing the Registrar to estimate and certify the wife's probable costs of suit, and directed the husband to pay the sum so certified into Court. The husband, being a man of next to no means, failed to pay into Court the sum certified by the Registrar. Held, on an application by the wife to stay proceedings until such costs were paid, that it would be unreasonable to stay proceedings on account of the husband being unable to pay into Court that which he did not possess; but that, inasmuch as the affidavits filed by the parties were contradictory as to the means of the husband, the matter should be referred (if the parties so desired it) for an enquiry by an officer of the Court into the question of means. *THOMSON v. YOUNG v. YOUNG . . . I. L. R., 23 Cal., 913 note

9. ————— Withdrawal of petition for dissolution of marriage—Costs of petitioner, on what scale allowed—Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 7 and 45.—The petitioner on the 2nd June 1896 presented her petition, in which she prayed for the dissolution of her marriage with the respondent on the grounds of adultery and cruelty. A commission was issued at her instance to examine witnesses in England on the charges of adultery and cruelty, and the result of their evidence was that the petitioner was satisfied that the charges brought by her against her husband were wholly unfounded, and she, on the 2nd September 1897, applied for leave to withdraw her suit, and for payment of her costs by the respondent. She contended that her costs should be paid by him as between attorney and client. The respondent submitted he ought to pay costs as between party and party. Held that the petitioner's costs, including costs of this application, be taxed as between party and party, it being open for the attorney for the wife to sue the husband for the rest of the costs. BUTT v. 10. ————— and s. 36—Alimony pendente lite—Decree nisi for dissolution of marriage—Application to make decree absolute—Arrears of alimony.—A husband who had obtained a decree nisi for the dissolution of his marriage with his wife on the ground of her adultery applied to have such decree made absolute. At the time this application was made, arrears of alimony pendente lite were due to the wife. The Court (STRAIGHT, J.) refused to make such decree absolute until such arrears were paid. DE BRETTON v. DE BRETTON I. L. R., 4 All., 295

11. ————— and s. 37—Alimony pendente lite—Permanent alimony—Practice.—Alimony pendente lite cannot be granted on an application made after a decree nisi in the suit has been passed, nor is it in the power of the Court to grant permanent alimony until an application is made to make such decree absolute. BENNETT v. out the fact of the marriage in the petition. An affidavit to that effect is unnecessary. In making the application, it is sufficient to show the Court that there has been a ceremony which might be a valid marriage; and therefore, where the petitioner was shown to be the respondent's deceased wife's sister, alimony was granted. CRUMP v. CRUMP

[3 B. L. R., O. C., 101]

■ ————— Alimony pendente lite—Practice.—Alimony pendente lite will be granted by the Court from the date of the service of citations, not from the date of the return. KELLY v. KELLY AND SAUNDERS . . . 3 B. L. R., Ap., 4

3. ————— Alimony pendente lite—Wife living with co-respondent—Costs.—In a suit by the husband for a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, where it is found that the wife is at the time of presenting the petition living with the co-respondent, or living apart from the husband, under such circumstances that she does not pledge his credit, an application by the wife for alimony pendente lite will be refused. Semble—The wife's costs, however, will be allowed. GORDON v. GORDON AND SARAH . . . 3 B. L. R., Ap., 13

4. ————— Alimony—Failure to pay—Attachment of respondent.—The respondent in a suit brought by a wife for the dissolution of her marriage was ordered to pay her Rs120 a month for alimony, and to pay into Court Rs2,000, the certified amount of her costs. On his failure to pay this sum, he was directed by a further order to pay into Court to the credit of the suit Rs300 monthly, out of which Rs120 were for alimony and the balance for costs. The respondent continued in receipt of his usual income, but failed to make the payment directed by the order of the Court, and subsequently filed his petition of insolvency; in his schedule he entered the Accountant General as a creditor for Rs2,000, but made no mention of his liability for alimony, and he had not filed any accounts. On an application by the petitioner for his attachment stating the above facts, the Court granted the attachment. GEORGE v. GEORGE

5. ————— Alimony pendente lite—Nett income—Allowable deductions—Change of circumstances.—A petition by a wife—petitioner in the one and respondent in the other of two cross-suits (matrimonial)—for an increase of alimony was treated by consent on appeal as a petition for alimony. It appeared that the respondent was in receipt of a salary from Government which was subject to deductions on account of the pension and annuity funds, that his circumstances were involved, and he had agreed with his creditors to discharge his liabilities by certain instalments, that as part of such agreement he was keeping up a policy of insurance on his life, and that he was maintaining and educating three children in England, but that his salary had increased since the order first made for alimony. Held that the respondent was entitled as of right to have only the deductions on account of pension and annuity funds taken into

In this case, however, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, took into consideration the expenses the respondent was put to in maintaining his children, and also the arrangement he had made for liquidating his debts. Quere—Whether the Court has power to increase or diminish an allotment of alimony made pendente lite on account of change of circumstances? *R. v. 7. ——— Alimony—Application for refund of alimony paid by mistake after the period during which it was payable had expired—Minor children—Divorce Act, s. 3, cl. (5).—In 1882, a decree for dissolution of marriage between E. M. and S. M. was passed by the High Court on the wife's petition, and the husband was ordered to pay alimony for the wife and certain minor children of the marriage. On the 26th of August 1895, a petition was presented to the Court on behalf of E. M. stating that S. M. had married again on the 3rd of August 1895; that one of the children in respect of whom alimony was payable had come of age on the 16th of April 1895; and that another of such children had married in April 1893, and it was prayed that certain sums which had been paid into Court after the respective dates mentioned above as alimony in respect of the three persons above referred to might be refunded. Held that E. M. was not entitled to any refund of alimony except as to sums, if any, paid into Court after the date of the filing of petition for refund and relating to a period subsequent to that date. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF MORGAN [I. 3. ——— Adultery and desertion—Delay in bringing suit—Permanent alimony.—A wife brought a suit for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery and desertion. The desertion took place twenty-four years before the suit was brought, and ever since the husband had made his wife an allowance. Latterly his circumstances had considerably improved. The Court gave a decree for dissolution, but in determining the suitable amount of permanent alimony it took into consideration the circumstances of the husband at the time of the desertion, and refused to give the wife the full advantage of the present improved circumstances of the husband. SMYTH v. SMYTH [5 B. L. R., Ap., 153]

4. ——— Alimony—Costs.—The Court has power, under s. 37 of Act IV of 1869, to order permanent alimony to the wife when a husband obtains a divorce on the ground of her adultery. KELLY v. KELLY AND SAUNDERS . . . 5 B. L. R., 71

The marriage having been dissolved on the ground of the adultery of the wife before any children were born of the marriage, and the wife having subsequently married the co-respondent, by whom she had children, and with whom she continued to live, the Court, under s. 40, Act IV of 1869, declared the settlement void as regarded the wife, and directed the trustees to re-convey the property to A for an absolute estate. *WOOD v. — ss. 51 and 52—Suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of wife's adultery—Evidence of adultery—Co-respondent.—The co-respondent, in a suit by a husband for the dissolution of his marriage with his wife on the ground of adultery, was summoned by the petitioner in such suit as a witness. The Court did not explain to him, before he was sworn, that it was not compulsory upon, but optional with, him to give evidence or not. He did not object to be sworn, and replied to the questions asked him by the petitioner's counsel without hesitation, until he was asked whether he had had sexual intercourse with the respondent. He then asked the Court whether he was bound to answer such question. The Court told him that he was bound to do so, and he accordingly answered such question, answering it in the affirmative. Had the Court not told him that he was bound to answer such question, he would have declined to answer it. Held, under such circumstances, that the co-respondent had not "offered" to give evidence within the meaning of s. 51 of the Divorce Act, 1869, and therefore his evidence was not admissible. DE BRETTON v. 3. — Appeal by a wife from order made in suit for divorce—Wife's costs—Security for costs—Memorandum of appeal admitted without requiring security.—In a suit for divorce brought by a wife against her husband, the wife obtained a decree nisi which ordered the respondent to pay a monthly sum by way of alimony to the wife, and also ordered him to pay the wife's costs of suit. Under this decree, a sum of Rs. 369 was due to the wife on the 26th May 1882. 4. — Appeal—Production of additional evidence in Appellate Court.—At the hearing of an appeal from a decree dismissing a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage on the ground of her husband's incestuous adultery with her sister M and cruelty, the appellant produced certain letters written by the respondent and M to each other which showed that a criminal intimacy existed between them. These letters were not written until after the appellant had filed the appeal. Held that such letters were admissible and should be admitted, and that, having been brought to the Court's notice by the appellant's counsel, the Court was bound in the interests of justice to require their production in order to enable it to decide the appeal on its real merits. MORGAN v. In order to obtain his release, he contracted to purchase from the defendant, for the plaintiff, the timber which he was charged with stealing, at a price much beyond its value. Held that the plaintiff might repudiate the contract as obtained under duress. In England the mere fact of imprisonment is not deemed sufficient to avoid an agreement made by one who is in lawful custody under the regular process of a Court of competent jurisdiction where no undue advantage is taken of the situation of the party making the agreement. But in a country in which there is no settled system of law or procedure and where the Judge is invested with arbitrary powers, imprisonment may in itself amount to duress such as will avoid a contract entered into by the prisoner with a view of obtaining release. *MOUNG SNOAY ATT v. Reversing the decision of the High Court, which was that the plaintiff had assented to the proceedings under intimidation, their Lordships held that on the evidence no intimidation had been proved, and that a suit to cancel this dakhil kharij and for a declaration of the proprietary right of the plaintiff, in whose name the villages stood before the mutation, had been rightly dismissed in the first Court. *HAR LAL v. DUTIES

1. ———— Duties—Levy of duties—Haq—Act XIX of 1844 (Levy of Haqs, Bombay), Act XX of 1859 (Town Duties, Bombay)—Abolition of duties and haqs.—Held (TUCKER, J., dissenting) that all town duties, taxes, and cesses of every kind on trades or professions (and not merely such of them as were then levied by Government) were abolished by Act XIX of 1844, and that a privilege enjoyed by a private person to levy certain fees on articles imported and exported through three of the city gates of Surat, and originating in an alienation by a former sovereign of a portion of the royal revenues derivable from that source, ceased from the date when the said Act came into operation; and consequently that the Court was not precluded from so deciding, because the provisions of Act XX of 1839 (empowering the Governor in Council of Bombay to prohibit the levy of haqs and fees) had not been complied with in forbidding the levy of the fees in question. PER COUCH, J.—The intention of the Legislature in 1844 appears, from the language used by it in Act XIX, and from the recital in Act XVI of that year, to have been the import on salt being about to be increased, that, instead of leaving haqs such as this to be abolished at different times under the Act of 1839, they were then to be entirely abolished. *NASAR-VANJI PESTANJI v. 2. ———— Toda garas haq—Alienation of haq—Bombay Act VII of 1863, ss. 27, 32.—Held, in the absence of proof on the part of Government to the contrary, that there is nothing in the nature of a toda garas payment which makes it incapable of alienation; and that without such proof Government receiving such sums cannot withhold payment of them from the alienee of the person to whom, but for the alienation, they would be paid. Held also that toda garas haq does not come within the meaning of the word "lands" as defined by s. 32 of Bombay Act VII of 1863, and that a suit having reference to the recovery of sums due out of such haq is not affected by s. 27 of that Act. *COLLECTOR OF SURAT v. Where Government has paid a toda garas haq to a garashia for a long and uninterrupted period of time, the onus

The mortgage-deed gave to the mortgagee the use of a certain privy situated in another part of the house and the right of way to it through a certain bol or passage. V subsequently sold the whole house to C, and C in 1880 mortgaged the western part of it to R, who got a decree, and in execution the part mortgaged to him (i.e., the west) was sold in 1885, and the defendant became the purchaser. In 1887, C sold the east part to the plaintiff, who paid off the mortgage to M, and obtained M's endorsement of payment on his deed of conveyance. The plaintiff subsequently sued to restrain the defendant from interfering with his use of the passage and of the privy. The defendant alleged that both were comprised in the property purchased by him at the Court sale in 1885, and that the right given by the mortgage of 1878 was merely a license to the mortgagee, and not an easement. Held that the use of the passage and of the privy was a privilege granted by the very instrument which created the mortgage, and should be regarded as a privilege ancillary to the use of the part of the house mortgaged to M in 1878. The defendant's purchase in 1885 was subject to the easement acquired by M (the mortgagee), and the plaintiff had purchased the mortgagee's interest in the house, which included her right by way of easement. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to the use of the privy and the passage.

In the mortgage-deed of 1880, by which the west part of the house was mortgaged by C to B, the following clause was contained: "You are to have the use of the drain for passing water as it has continued from old times." Held that these words should be understood as intended to reserve to C (the mortgagor), in respect of the part of the house not included in the mortgage, a right to use the drain similar to the right given to the mortgagee. The right so reserved by C was afterwards sold by C to the plaintiff along with the east part of the house in 1887, and the plaintiff was therefore entitled to the use of the drain. The plaintiff purchased a part of the house which the vendor had previously mortgaged to M. The mortgage-deed gave to the mortgagee the use of a certain privy and the right of going to it through a passage situated at the rear of the mortgaged part of the house. M was not a party to the conveyance to the plaintiff, but at the time of the purchase the plaintiff paid off M's mortgage, and M signed a receipt for the mortgage-money endorsed on the conveyance. Held that the plaintiff must be taken to have purchased the mortgagor's interest in the house, including the right by way of easement over the passage. VISHNU C. 5. — Easements of necessity—Light and air—Severance of tenements by grantor—Implied reservation of easement—Derogation of grant—Reservation of easements of necessity—Injunction—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 13—Act VIII of 1891.—One W was the owner of a certain house behind which was a courtyard or chok half of which belonged to him and the other half to one M (the defendant's father), who owned a house close by. Two of the rear rooms of W's house abutted upon his portion of the chok, and had two doors opening out into the chok. In 1861, W sold (inter alia) his half of the chok to M. The conveyance contained no reservation of any rights over the chok. W having died in 1875-76, his widow J sold his house to the plaintiff, and shortly afterwards the defendant (M's son) put up a boarding on the chok which blocked up the abovementioned doors of the plaintiff's house, and obstructed the light and air passing through them into the said two rear rooms. The plaintiff sued for an injunction. Held that, as W had made an absolute sale to M of his portion of the chok, expressly reciting that he had reserved no interest in the chok, it would, in the circumstances of this case, be contrary to equity and good conscience to hold that he impliedly reserved a right of light and air over the chok, so as to prevent B from building on the chok and thus obstructing the windows and doors in W's house overlooking the chok. Held also that the case was not governed by s. 13, cl. (c), of the Easements Act (V of 1882), which was not extended to the Bombay Presidency till Act VIII of 1891 was passed. CHUNILAL MANOHARAM C. MANISHANKAR ATMARAM easement upon severance of tenement.—On partition of a family dwelling house by a consent decree, the plaintiff claimed a right to the passage of light and air necessary for the enjoyment of his share of the building in the way in which it was enjoyed at the time of the partition, though no such right was expressly reserved in the decree. The defence was that the principle of an implied grant of easement upon severance of the tenement should not be applied to the case, but that the rights of the parties should be determined solely with reference to the decree made in the partition suit. Held that the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience should be applied to the case, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed, even in the absence of any express provision in the decree reserving such right. Quere—Whether the principle of an implied grant of easement in severance of tenements would apply in a case where the partition was effected by a decree of the Court in a contested suit and not by a consent of parties. KADAMBINI DEBI C. 7. — Easement by custom—Water rights—Landlord and tenant.—The plaintiffs were lessees from a zamindar of his entire zamindari, and were in occupation of lands depending for irrigation on a tank into which a natural stream emptied itself. The defendants were tenants in the zamindari, holding (under a lease prior to that of the plaintiffs) land supplied with water by an irrigation channel from the stream. The defendants erected a dam across the stream when it was low, and this had the effect of diverting all the water into the irrigation channel supplying their land. In a suit for an injunction that the dam be removed, the lower Appellate Court upheld a plea by the defendants that the dam had been erected in exercise of an established customary right of easement. Held that the customary easement asserted by the defendants was not unreasonable, and was enforceable by them against the lessees of the zamindar. ORE C. 8. — Right of entry on land in order to repair—Dominant and servient owners, Rights and liabilities of—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 24, ill. (a)—Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 122.—The Rajnagar Spinning and Weaving Company had a mill on one side of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway line and a ginning factory on the other. To bring water from the mill to the factory, a pipe had been laid beneath the railway line, and brick reservoirs at each side to preserve the proper level of the water. Servants of the company, having entered on the railway premises to repair the pipe and reservoirs without having first obtained the permission of the Railway Company, were convicted by a Magistrate under s. 122 of the Railways Act (IX of 1890) of an unlawful entry upon a railway. It was proved that the repairs were necessary. Held, reversing the convictions and sentences, that, as the pipes and reservoir belonged to the Spinning and Weaving Company and were kept in repairs by them, they, as owners of the dominant tenement, had a right to enter on the premises of the Railway Company, the owners of the servient tenement, to effect any necessary repairs, and that the entry in question, being in the exercise of a right, could not be called unlawful. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VANMALE. . . . I. L. R., 22 Bom., 525

The definition of easement in the Easements Act (V of 1882) is wide enough to embrace such an easement, and s. 28, cl. 10. ——— Right of growing rice plants in another's land to be afterwards transplanted to his own—Easements Act (V of 1882), ss. 4 and 52—License.—A "license" as defined by s. 52 of the Indian Easements Act (V of 1882) is not, as in the case of an "easement," connected with the ownership of any land, but creates only a personal right or obligation. License rights are not generally transferable, and the transferee is not bound to continue the license granted by the former owner, while easements once established follow the property. The plaintiff claimed and proved a prescriptive right of using certain land belonging to the defendant's mortgagor for a part of every year for raising rice plants to be afterwards transplanted to his own land. Held that the right was clearly enjoyed by the plaintiff as owner of some land to which the young rice plants were transplanted, and that such a right, so attached to plaintiff's land, was not a license, but an easement of the nature of profits à prendre. SUNDEBAI v. JAYAWANT. . . . I. L. R., 23 Bom., 397

11. ——— Water-course—Riparian owners, Rights of—Jurisdiction of mamlatdar.—The law as to riparian owners is the same in India as in England, and is stated in illus. (4) of s. 7 of the Easements Act (V of 1882). Each proprietor has a right to a reasonable use of the water as it passes his land, but, in the absence of some special custom, he has no right to dam it back, or exhaust it, so as to deprive other riparian owners of like use. What would constitute an unreasonable diversion of water such as to disturb the use of the lower riparian owners is a question of fact which the Legislature has given a mamlatdar jurisdiction to decide. *NARAYAN HARI DEVAL v. 3. ——— Necessity for plaintiff to prove superior title.—It is essential that a claimant, seeking to oust a party in possession of an estate, should establish his own right to the estate, and not rely upon the failure of the title impeached. A decree of the Sudder Court held that, although the title set up by the plaintiff was wholly bad, yet that a party defendant with whom the plaintiff had, by a deed of compromise, agreed to divide the estate, had shown his title, and on that ground decreed possession against the other defendant. Such decree reversed by the Privy Council on appeal, as the effect of the decree would be (1) to defeat the defendant's possessory title without giving him an opportunity of contesting the title of the party by whom he is turned out of possession, and (2) as it was a violation of legal principles which protect possession and of the substantial principles of justice which regulate the joinder of parties and union of titles to sue in one suit. *JOWALA BUKSH v. This decree was transferred for execution to the Collector, who sold the land and rateably distributed the proceeds, except to V, who declined to take the amount tendered as his share. In a suit against V and the purchasers under E's decree to recover his mortgage-debt by a sale of the property mortgaged to him, the proceedings of the Collector were held to be without jurisdiction, and the plaintiff was entitled to ignore them, and assert his claim under the mortgage. Held that the defendants, being in actual possession,—albeit through a sale under a void decree,—could not be ousted in the present suit, and were entitled to say that the plaintiff had not proved his title to sell the specific lands mortgaged. NARAYAN NAGARKAR v. one wrong-doer against another—First and second mortgages of occupancy holding.—Where an occupancy holding was mortgaged under two successive mortgage-deeds to different parties, and, the mortgagees under the first mortgage having been put in possession, the mortgagees under the second mortgage sued to eject them,—Held that both parties being wrong-doers, inasmuch as both mortgages were illegal, the defendants who were in possession had a right as against the plaintiffs to retain possession. *USUF KHAN v. 21. ——— Sale by mortgagor of parts of the mortgaged property.—Suit for sale by mortgagee without joining the vendees—Subsequent suit to eject mortgagor's vendees—Cause of action—Right of suit.—A mortgagor, who had given a simple mortgage over certain land, sold some of the mortgaged property. The mortgagee, after such sale had taken place, and without making the vendees parties to his suit, brought a suit for sale on his mortgage, and having caused the mortgaged property to be sold, including that portion which had been sold by the mortgagor, purchased it himself. The mortgagee then sued to eject the vendees of the mortgagor. Held that the suit would not lie, inasmuch as the plaintiff (mortgagee) had at its commencement no title to present possession of that particular portion of the mortgaged property as against anyone. *HARGU LAL SINGH v. M and C brought a suit on their mortgage without making D a party to it, obtained a decree, and put the house up to sale, and it was purchased by M L. Subsequently to the date of the decree in the above suit, D brought a suit on his mortgage, without making M and C parties thereto, obtained a decree and put the house up to sale, and it was purchased by B D. B D then sued M L for ejectment and damages. Held that the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed; and that it was not competent to the Court to grant a decree in favour of the plaintiff conditioned on the failure of the defendant to redeem the mortgage upon which the plaintiff's title was ultimately based. HARGU LAL SINGH v. (b), and 80.—The words "shall add to any existing embankment" in cl. (b), s. 76 of Bengal Act II of 1882, are not intended to mean any repair of an existing embankment, even if the effect of such repair be to make the embankment higher or broader, but only means an extension in the length of an existing embankment. Bear all losses incurred on that account; and also that he should do embankment work at the proper time and should be liable for loss from negligence. It did not appear whether the embankment was in existence when the kabuliat was granted. It was proved that the defendants received an annual sum from Government as a contribution to the repairs of embankments, but such payment was not provided for in the kabuliat, and no evidence was given as to the terms of the agreement under which it was paid. Held that there was no common law liability to repair imposed on the defendants; that it not having been proved that the embankment in question was in existence at the date of the kabuliat, the defendants were not liable ratione tenure, and that, if the sum paid by Government was in consideration of the defendants' maintaining the embankment in question and if the terms of the agreement under which it was paid showed that it was intended to impose the obligation to repair for the public benefit, the defendants would be liable. 1. — Legal rights of owner of land —Owner not compellable to accept compensation instead of removal of encroachment.—In a suit to recover land adjacent to a temple belonging to the defendants, on which land the defendants had encroached by building verandahs, the lower Courts found that the land sued for was the property of the plaintiff subject to the defendants' right of access to the temple, and directed the defendants to pay compensation to the plaintiff for the encroachment. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held that, the land being found to be the plaintiff's, the Courts could not compel him to part with his legal rights and accept compensation against his will, however reasonable it might appear to be. The defendants were accordingly ordered to remove the verandahs complained of and to restore possession of the land to the plaintiff. GOVIND VENKAJI v. SADASHIV BHARMA SHET . . . I. L. R., 17 Bom., 771

2. — Injury to property—Contributory act—Tort—Contributory negligence.—As in the case of contributory negligence, so an act of one party can only be contributory to the injury he complains of, if by the exercise of ordinary care the other party could not have avoided causing the injury. MADHAVA RAU v. FERNANDES

3. — Stranger building on land of another—Acquiescence of owner—Delay of owner in suing possession—Form of decree.—It is well established law in England that if a stranger builds on the land of another, although believing it to be his own, the owner is entitled to recover the land with the building on it, unless there are special circumstances amounting to a standing by so as to induce the belief that the owner intended to forego his right or to an acquiescence in his building on the land. This is also the law in India, with the exception that the party building on the land of another is allowed to remove the building. Delay by the owner in bringing a suit is not in itself sufficient to create an equity in favour of the person spending money on the land so as to deprive the owner of his strict rights. The decree made by the High Court was that the plaintiff should recover the land with liberty to the defendant forthwith to commence to remove his building and to restore the property to the condition in which it was when he took possession, the same to be completed within one year from date of decree. In default, the plaintiff to be at liberty to remove the building at the expense of the defendant. PREMIJI JIVAN BHATE v. CASSUM JUMA AHMED

2. Suit for management of religious endowment—Right of suit—Act XX of 1863, s. 18—Parties—Jurisdiction of High Court.—The plaintiffs, describing themselves as the Calcutta Tairo Pantee Anungo Punch Brethren, in whom (as they alleged) was vested the management and control of the temples, endowments, and worship of the Degumbery sect of Jains, and who formed the committee for the management of all the Jain charities as well in Calcutta as in all the other towns and places in India, brought a suit, praying, inter alia, for the construction of a will, and for a declaration of their rights thereunder as members of the said Punch, and to have property dedicated by the will to religious purposes ascertained and secured. Held per KENNEDY, J., in the Court below, that the description of the character in which the plaintiffs sued was uncertain and ambiguous; that, inasmuch as the property in question was not dewutter, the plaintiffs were not sebaits, and all they could claim, therefore, was a right of management; and that a mere manager, without some special power which the Hindu law confers on sebaits, could not institute such a suit; that the plaintiffs not being a corporation could not sue in a corporate character; that assuming religious endowments had been created by the will, leave to bring the suit should have been obtained under s. 18 of Act XX of 1863; and that, if the gifts in the will could be treated as charitable bequests, possibly the Advocate General could sue. Held on appeal, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the right in which the plaintiffs sued was sufficiently shown, and that the object of the suit was not to assert any personal right of ownership in the plaintiffs. Held, further, that the Advocate General was not a necessary party, although it was desirable that such suits should be brought only with his consent, or by the leave of the Court. Held, further, that suits of this description do not fall under Act XX of 1863, but come under the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court, inherited from the Supreme Court, and conferred upon that Court by its Charter—a jurisdiction similar in its general features to that of the

4. ————— Property in British India of a temple outside British India—Jurisdiction in suit to declare right to officiate in temple and for share of temple property.—The plaintiff was a member of a family which had the management, and received the income, of certain property situate in British India belonging to a temple situate at Ashta in the Nizam's territory. Part of the income was devoted to religious services and part to the support of the family. The plaintiff sued to recover by partition his share of the income and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff in celebrating religious worship at the temple when his turn came to officiate. The defendant (his brother) resided at Ashta. Held that the right to share in the income followed the devolution of the office, and that the Court could not grant the relief prayed for, as the Courts in British India could not execute their decree by putting the plaintiff in possession of his office when his turn came to officiate at the temple which was outside British India. According to Hindu text-writers as regards public endowments, religious offices are naturally indivisible, though modern custom has sanctioned a departure in respect of allowing the parties entitled to share to officiate by turns, and of allowing alienation within certain restrictions. TRIMBAK RAMKRISHNA BANADE v. LAKSHMAN RAMKRISHNA BANADE. L. L. R., 20 Bom., 495

5. ————— Succession in management of muth—Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1865), ss. 14, 18—Went of asceticism of paradesi—Removal of paradesi—Form of decree—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 18, 43, 539—Right of suit—Res judicata—Relinquishment or omission to sue for portion of claim.—The plaintiff, the zamindar of Sivagunga, sued in a subordinate Court to remove the defendant from the office of head of a muth. The defendant was a married man living with his wife and children, whom he maintained with the produce of the property of the muth, and it appeared that he had failed to perform the ceremonies of the institution. The muth in question came into existence under a deed of endowment or "charity grant," whereby the first zamindar of Sivagunga granted land to his gura for the erection and maintenance of a muth and the performance of certain religious exercises in perpetuity, and provided that the head of the muth

should be of the line of disciples of the original grantee whose spiritual family he desired to perpetuate. In 1867 a predecessor in title of the plaintiff had sued unsuccessfully to recover certain property of the muth from the defendant, alleging another cause of action than his status as a married man and his misappropriation of the muth property; and in that suit it was established that the head of the muth for the time being had the right to appoint his successor, and that such appointment was not subject to confirmation by the zamindar. No sanction had been obtained for the institution of the present suit. It appeared that the trusts of the muth had been violated and the income misapplied, and that there was no qualified disciple in whom the right of succession had vested, and that the members of the plaintiff's family were the only persons interested in the appointment. Held (1) that the jurisdiction of the subordinate Court was not ousted by Act XX of 1863, since the trusts of the institution were in the nature of private trusts; (2) that sanction under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code was not a prerequisite of the suit for the same reason; (3) that the suit was not barred by limitation, its object being to prevent a specific endowment from being diverted from its legitimate object and to re-attach it to that object; (4) that the suit was not barred under s. 18 or s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code; (5) that the proper decree was (1) to declare the plaintiff's right to appoint a qualified person with the concurrence of the rest of his family; (2) to direct him to do so within a given time, failing which the suit should stand dismissed with costs. If such appointment was made, notice should be given to the other members of the plaintiff's family before it was confirmed; if such appointment were confirmed, the property should be directed to be delivered to the person appointed to be administered in accordance with the trusts and usage of the muth. Semble—That the paradesi or head of the muth might be a married man, provided he had been duly initiated. RATHAPPAIYAR v. 6. ————— Public, religious, and charitable trust—Hindu temple, with a dharmashala and endowments attached to it—Trustee—Liability of constructive trustee.—A Hindu built a temple in honour of the deity Shri Pandurang, to which were attached a dharmashala and a madayat for feeding travellers and giving alms to the poor. For the maintenance of the temple and the charities connected with it, he dedicated certain property by a deed of gift, under which he constituted himself a trustee for life and appointed a panch to act as his successors in the trust. During his lifetime he managed the temple as provided in the deed. On his death in 1867, the panch did not take charge, but his son (the defendant) assumed the management. The temple was open to the Hindu community. In 1894 the pujari of the temple and five other worshippers of the idol filed this suit under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) with the sanction of the Advocate General, for removing the defendant from the management of the temple on the ground of his misconduct and mismanagement of the trust property. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the property was not a public, religious, and charitable trust; that he was not a trustee; that the plaintiffs had no right to sue; and that the suit was time-barred. Held (1) that, having regard to the fact that a certain number of the public had always used the temple, that there was attached to it a dharmashala, and that the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a sadavart, the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public, religious, and charitable purposes; (2) that although the defendant was not appointed a trustee, yet by taking charge of the endowment, and purporting to manage it as temple property, he made himself a constructive trustee, and was liable as such to the beneficiaries. JUGALKISHORE v. LAKSHMANDAS BAGHUNATH DAS (I. L. R., 23 Bom., 659)

7. — Madras Regulation VII of 1817—Order of Revenue Board appointing manager—Suit by trustees for possession.—The suit was brought by the trustees of certain pagodas for the recovery of six villages for the defendant on behalf of the pagodas, and to declare a copper sanad, purporting to be an ancient grant on which defendant based his title, a forgery. The District Judge considered that the evidence sufficiently established that the title to the villages was in the temples, and not in the defendant, but he was also of opinion that, as defendant had been lawfully placed in management by the Board of Revenue in 1858, he was entitled to hold the villages for life. He therefore declared plaintiff's reversionary title as trustee of the temples on the death of the defendant. Defendant appealed from this decision as to the title, and plaintiff appealed as to the part of the decree which refused him immediate possession of the property. Held by INNES, J., that the title to manage must reside in the pagoda if it did not reside in the defendant, that the evidence abundantly negated the title of the defendant, and that plaintiff was entitled to possess and manage the property as trustee of the temples. Upon the question whether plaintiff was precluded from recovering during the lifetime of defendant, by reason of the order of 1858, placing defendant in possession, —Held that the Government could not create a valid title to more than they themselves possessed; that they had simply taken over the possession and management of the endowment, and afterwards given it over to defendant; that by so doing they relieved themselves of the trust they had undertaken under Regulation VII of 1817, but did not thereby appoint defendant a manager under Regulation VII of 1817. NALLATHUMBI BATTAR v. contained no new law, but merely declared the pre-existing common law of this country. NARAYAN v. CHINTAMAN . . . I. L. R., 5 Bom., 898

9. — Charity—Family idols—Sale of trust property in execution—Suit by trustee to recover the property—Limitation.—The Hindu law, unlike the English law with respect to charities, makes no distinction between a religious endowment having for its object the worship of a household idol and one which is for the benefit of the general public. In execution of decrees against the plaintiff as the representative of his deceased father and brother, certain lands were sold to the first defendant. The plaintiff sued to recover them, alleging that the former owner of the lands had assigned them to his (the plaintiff's) brother and himself (the plaintiff) and their descendants by a deed of gift to perpetuate the worship of the donor's household idol. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the property. The gift was a valid one, creating a religious endowment under the Hindu law, and that the plaintiff's suit was not to set aside the sale, but was one by the trustee of the endowment to recover the property to which the limitation of twelve years was applicable. RUPA JAGSHET v. KRISHNAJI GOVIND (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 189)

10. — Charitable endowment—Trust property sold in execution—Rights of heirs of the creator of the trust against execution-purchaser.—A trust-deed of certain property executed by the member of a Hindu family provided that neither he nor his heirs should incumber or alienate it, but that in case of necessity his heirs might maintain themselves out of the income while administering the trust of a certain charity. The provisions of the trust were not proved to have been observed by the settlor or his family, and the settlor on one occasion disclaimed the trust. The trust property was attached and sold in execution of personal decrees passed against the settlor and another member of his family. The widow of the latter, after the death of the settlor, sued to recover the land from the execution-purchaser as heir to the settlor. Held the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the land. Rupa Jagshet v. Those trustees dealt with the property in a manner inconsistent with the trust by making alienations thereof as if it were their own private property. In 1893 the representative in title of the original settlor sued in the Court of the District Judge of Gorakhpur to have certain alienations made by the said trustees set aside and the property restored to its original uses, and for the appointment of a new trustee or new trustees in place of the trustees, defendants to the suit. Held that such a suit was rightly brought under s. 14 of Act XX of 1863, and that it was not essential for the application of that Act that the endowment should ever have been taken under the control of the Board of Revenue. Ganes Sing v. Ramgopal Sing, 5 B. L. R., 44, 55, and Dhurram Singh v. Kissen Singh, I. L. R., 7 Cal., 767, approved. Raghobar Dial v. Kesko Ramannay Das, I. L. R., 8 Bom., 365, and Jawakra v. Akhar Husain, I. L. R., 7 All., 178, referred to. Held also that, there being no special provision in the endowment for the appointment of trustees, the right of nomination remained vested in the founder of the endowment, and that the right to nominate continued to his heirs. Gossami Sri Gridharyi v. Romanlal; Gossami, I. L. R., 17 Cal., 3; I. L. R., 16 J. A., 137, referred to. SUBBATHAN KUNWARI v. RAM PARAGAU [I. L. R., 18 All., 227]

12. — Trust—Ground for removing hereditary trustee—Mistake by trustee as to true legal position—Appointment of a devasthan committee—Scheme of management.—A mistake by a hereditary trustee of a devasthan as to his true legal position does not of necessity afford a ground for removing him from his post of manager and entrusting it to new hands. The management of a devasthan being found to be lax and improvident, but not fraudulent and dishonest, the Court declined to remove the manager, but appointed a devasthan committee to supervise and control him, and framed a scheme for the management of the trust. ANNAJI RAGHONATH GOSAVI v. NARAYAN SITARAM [I. L. R., 21 Bom., 556]

13. — Devasthanam committee—Grounds for removal from office—Errors of judgment on part of committee-man.—Mere error in judgment on the part of a member of a devasthanam committee is not sufficient to disqualify him from continuing to hold such office. To justify the removal of such an office-holder, it must be shown that the further holding by him of the office is incompatible with the interests of the temple under the charge of the committee of which he is a member. The duty of a devasthanam committee consists primarily in seeing that its endowments are appropriated to their legitimate purposes, and are not wasted. It is not a part of the duty of such a committee to interfere with the trustees in matters relating to rituals. TIRUVENKADATH AYYANGAR v. SRINIVASA THEATHACHARIAS . . . I. L. R., 22 Mad., 361

14. — Devasthanam committee—Dismissal of dharmakarta by three out of five members of committee without meeting—Legality of such dismissal.—The dharmakarta of a temple was suspended and dismissed from office in the following manner:—One member of the devasthanam committee consisting of five initiated an enquiry, received petitions and took evidence, submitting the results of his enquiry to two other members successively, the three signing an order calling upon the dharmakarta to present himself at the office for the purpose of an enquiry in certain charges laid against him. No date was fixed for the enquiry, and the two remaining members of the committee took no part in the proceedings. The dharmakarta took no notice of the order, whereupon the same three committee-men signed and issued another resolution dismissing him from his post. This resolution was sent to the other two members of the committee, but was not signed by them. Held that the dismissal was illegal. The dharmakarta, being the holder of an office, could only be removed from it by the corporate act of the committee generally. The acts of a corporation (to which the committee might be likened) must be performed at a meeting convened after due notice to all the members of the body; and though there might be exceptions to that rule, a case in which the matter to be decided involved the rights of third parties and a decision to their prejudice was one in which the rule should be enforced. THANDAVARAYA PILLAI v. SUBBAYYAR . . . I. L. R., 23 Mad., 468

15. — Powers of a Christian congregation to elect under which Bishopric the endowment should be placed in spiritual matters—Effect of a concordat placing the endowment within the territorial jurisdiction of a certain Bishop—Suit for partition of the endowment.—In the year 1806, a fund was started by a caste of Roman Catholic boatmen in Royapuram for the purpose of supplying the religious wants of the caste, and in 1829 the Church of St. Peter at Royapuram was erected. The fund was under the control of the Government Marine Board, which in 1830, in consequence of disputes between the headmen of the caste, suspended all payment. In 1863 a member of the caste, claiming to be sole surviving headman, brought a suit against Government for a declaration that he was sole surviving headman, and as such entitled to the sole management of the funds then in the hands of Government, which funds the Government paid into Court to the credit of the said suit. By the decree in this suit it was declared that the fund in question belonged to the whole body of Roman Catholic boatmen in Royapuram, that it must be devoted to the religious observances of the body, and that it rested with that body to determine whether in spiritual matters the Church should continue under the Vicar Apostolic or the Goanese Bishop of Mysapore. In 1886 a concordat was executed between the Pope of Rome and the King of Portugal, the effect of which was to place St. Peter's Church within the territorial jurisdiction of the Vicar Apostolic. Plaintiffs, who were members of the Goanese party, complained that, having regard to the effect of the concordat of 1886, it would be impossible for their party—even if in a majority—to elect a priest of their own party, and prayed for a division of the fund. Held that, even if this were so, this fact would not justify the Court in taking away from St. Peter's Church part of its endowment. CHINNARANI MUDALI v. Dismissal of Munsif—Power of Division Bench of High Court.—A Munsif who had been dismissed by an order of the English Committee, consisting of four Judges of the High Court, applied to a Division Bench, consisting of the Chief Justice and MITTER, J., to reconsider his case. The Chief Justice having dismissed his application, while MITTER, J., considered that he was entitled to a rehearing, he appealed under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The Court considered it unnecessary to enter into the merits of the questions raised, and held that, the Munsif having been removed by an order of four Judges forming the English Committee, no Division Bench had any power to reconsider, or review, or set aside, or to order the Judges of the English Committee to reconsider, review, or set aside the decision of the English Committee. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF HURISH CHUNDER MITTER

It only points out that there are certain portions of the English statute law which from their very nature were only passed for reasons connected with England, and which would not be applicable in India or any Colony of the British Crown, e.g., the Mortmain Acts, the Law of Aliens, and the like. SARKIS v. MOHSEN HUDDIN JOWARDAR v. SANDER

5. ——— Hereditary conditional tenure—Resumption, Necessity of, before enhancement—Descendant of grantee of jaghir.—A suit to enhance is not maintainable against the descendant of the grantee of a hereditary conditional jaghir. The zamindar must first sue to resume on the ground that the jaghir has been determined by breach of the condition through neglect of the service. NILMOHON SINGH DEO v. RAMGOPAL SINGH CHOWDHRY

10. ——— Assignment of rents to creditor for a term beyond existing lease—Right on expiration of term.—The mere circumstance that the landlord has assigned to a creditor a certain amount of the rents for certain years extending beyond an existing lease, does not prevent him from enhancing the rent after the expiration of the term. ESSEN CHUNDER MANICK v. Privy Council in the case of Surnomoyes v. Suttless Chunder Roy Bahadoor, 10 Moore's I. A., 128, the right of an auction-purchaser under s. 5 of Regulation XLIV of 1793 is limited to raising the rent of a talukh created by the defaulter to what is demandable from it according to the pargana rates prevailing either at the time when the talukh is created or at the time when the auction-purchase takes place; and he cannot demand any higher rent, even if, at any subsequent time, such higher rent be in accordance with the prevailing current rate. MOHINT MORUN ROY v. ISHAMOYES DASSA. I. L. R., 4 Cal., 612

18. ——— Independent talukh formerly part of a zamindari—Decree of 1805—Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, ss. 5 and 50—Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, s. 67.—A decree of the Sudder Diwani Adalat in 1805 declared that a talukh was fit to be separated from the zamindari of which it had originally been part according to the provisions of s. 5, Regulation VIII of 1793. The decree directed that, until separation, rent should be paid by the talukhdar to the zamindar, "according to the jumma already assessed upon the talukh"; this revenue to be, on the separation being effected, deducted from that assessed upon the zamindari. Proceedings with a view to separation then continued, but litigation and delays ensued, with the result that no separation had been effected when these suits were instituted in 1882 and 1885. In these suits, the holders of shares into which the zamindari had been partitioned claimed to enhance the rent on the talukh. Held that the decree of 1805, acted upon for many years, was conclusive that the talukh was not dependent on the zamindari, but an independent one, within s. 50, Regulation VIII of 1793; and that therefore the zamindars had no right of enhancement. S. 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, applies only to rent payable quarterly. HEMANTA KUMARI DEBI v. JAGADINDRA NATH ROY. I. L. R., 22 Cal., 214 [I. R., 21 I. A., 181]

19. ——— Inamdar—Tenants in possession before grant of inam.—An inamdar, though he cannot eject his tenants who have been in possession before the grant of the inam as long as they pay the rent due for their land, may nevertheless raise such rent at his pleasure (they not having acquired a prescriptive title), and is not restrained in doing so by the rates fixed by the Government survey. HARIBIN JOTI v. NARAYAN ACHARYA. 6 Bom., A. C., 23

20. ——— Miras—Limited power to enhance.—An inamdar's power to enhance the rent of mirasi tenants is limited. He cannot demand more rent than what is fair and equitable according to the custom of the country. PRATAPRAV GUJAR v. BATAJI NAMAJI. I. L. R., 8 Bom., 141

21. ——— Mirasidars—Right of inamdar to enhance their rent—Custom.—Mirasidars in an inam village cannot always claim to hold at a fixed rent. An inamdar can enhance their rents within the limits of custom. VISHVANATH BAIKASI v. DRONDAPPA. I. L. R., 17 Bom., 475

22. ——— Permanent tenant.—In every part of India the Government or its alienee is debarred, if not by law (as in Bengal), yet by the custom of the country, from enhancing the assessment of permanent tenants beyond a certain limit. What that limit is, must be determined by the circumstances of each case. In a suit by an inamdar, holding under a grant from Scindia made in 1793, against his permanent tenant for an enhanced rent, the Court, in the absence of law or contract to the contrary, affirmed the plaintiff's right to enhance the assessment to the extent to which, according to the old custom of the country, Scindia would have been entitled to enhance it, and upon a virtual admission of the defendant allowed enhancement to the extent of one-half the produce. PARSOTAM KESHAVDAS v. KALYAN RAYJI. I. L. R., 3 Bom., 348

23. ——— Nij-jote lands held by tenant without right of occupancy—Beng. Act VIII of 1859, ss. 9, 14, 15—Notice to quit.—A landlord seeking to obtain an enhanced rate of rent on account of nij-jote land held by a tenant without a right of occupancy has no right to obtain a judicial assessment upon the footing of a notice under Bengal Act VIII of 1859, ss. 14 and 15. His right in accordance with s. 8 is to make his own terms with the tenant or to turn him out of occupation. This he can do by serving the tenant with a reasonable notice to quit unless he agrees to pay the rent required, and if the tenant continues in occupation, he must be taken to have agreed by implication to pay the said rent. JANOO MUNDUR v. BALJO SINGH. 22 W. R., 548

24. ——— Lessee of house—Rent of sub-tenant.—The lessee of a share of a house has a right to raise the rent of such share, while in the occupation of a sub-tenant without a lease, after due notice of the increased rate, and to proceed to eject him if he refuses to pay the higher rent, even though he has been in possession for many years. RAM LALL v. CHUNMOH GHUTTUCK. 24 W. R., 271

25. ——— Shilatri lands—Bom. Reg. I of 1808, s. 4—Right of inamdars to raise assessment on shilatri lands.—Government, by an indenture, dated the 25th January 1819, conveyed to A and B, and their heirs and assigns, certain villages in the island of Salsette, with the exception of such spots of shilatri tenure as might be therein, or on any part thereof, which could only become the property of A and B, on their purchasing the same from the proprietors. Since 1819, the holders of these shilatri lands had paid to the grantees and their heirs assessment (or rent) at a fixed rate which, before the grant, they used to pay to Government. In an action brought by an heir of B and A in 1866 to recover an enhanced rent or assessment levied on these lands, Held that the effect of the exception in the indenture of 1819 being to throw upon the plaintiff the burden of proving his right to enhance the rent (or revenue), which he had failed to do, and Regulation I of 1808, s. 4, cl. 1 and 3, containing admissions by Government (which then was the

29. ——— Settlement with Government for higher revenue.—If a raiyat has a right of occupancy, his rate of rent can only be enhanced in the mode prescribed by law; if he has not, his landlord can only claim arrears of rent on the ground of actual agreement, express or implied. Such claim cannot be made at an enhanced rate simply because the landlord has settled with Government at a higher rate of revenue. ROOFUN ROY v. PURDEER SINGH

Where lands in excess of the number of bighas specified in a pottah have been held for more than sixty years, and have always been considered to form part of what was covered by the pottah, they are held to have been occupied as land included in the pottah since before the Decennial Settlement, and the rent of them cannot therefore be enhanced. JANOKER BULLUS CHUCKERBUTTY v. [3 Agra, Part II, 203]

40. ——— Transferable tenure—Mutation of names—Tenant who has transferred his holding—Liability of.—The main object of a suit for enhancement is to have the contract between the landlord and tenant as regards the rate of rent readjusted. In a suit for enhancement it was found that the defendant had, prior to institution, sold his holding, which by custom was transferable without the consent of the landlord, to a third party. There had been no mutation of names, or payment of a nazar, or execution of fresh lease; but the landlord had received rent from the third party, and was fully aware of the transfer. Held that the connection of the defendant with the holding had come to an end, and the suit against him did not lie. ABDUL AZIZ KHAN v. 65. ——— A plaintiff brought a suit for enhancement of rent of lands occupied with buildings under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Held per E. JACKSON, J., that, though Bengal Act VIII of 1869 does not apply to lands used for building purposes, the Civil Court has jurisdiction to determine suits concerning the rent of such lands, and therefore had jurisdiction to entertain the present suit. Held per MITTER, J., that the word "land" in Bengal Act VIII of 1869 is used in its ordinary sense, quite irrespective of the purposes for which it is applied; and that a suit for enhancement of the rent of land on which a house is built will lie under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. *BRAJANATH KUNDU CHOWDHRY v. Act VIII of 1869—Land with buildings on it.—Bengal Act VIII of 1869 relates only to agricultural holdings, and its provisions have no application to land forming part of a street in a town. The mere fact that a building has been erected on a piece of land with the consent of the proprietor does not give the occupant a right to hold the land perpetually at the same rate; and if the proprietor with an ultimate view of raising the rent brings a suit for ejectment, he has a right to have

68. ——— Land for purpose of silk factory—Enhancement of rent, suit for—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 14—Notice of enhancement.—Plaintiff, having served notice of enhancement, in terms of s. 14 of Bengal Rent Act VIII of 1869, of certain lands held by defendants on which reservoirs and buildings for the purposes of a silk filature had been constructed, brought a suit for such enhancement under Act VIII of 1869. The lower Court dismissed the suit, in spite of a statement in the plaint that the suit was brought under the latter Act on the ground that the rent of the tenure was not enhanceable under the Rent Law. Held that the lower Court ought not to have refused to decide the suit in the form in which it was brought, but ought to have enquired as to the nature of the tenancy whether it was held at a fixed rate or not. Held further that, although the suit was brought under the general law of procedure, the notice was not vitiated by the fact that the reasons assigned for the enhancement were reasons taken from the Rent Law applicable to the case of raiyats possessing rights of occupancy. *COOMAR FORESH NARAIN ROY v. (d) DEPENDENT TALUKHDARS.

75. ——— Beng. Reg. VIII of 1793, ss. 49, 51.—A dependent talukhdar, whose tenure was in existence before the Permanent Settlement, is entitled to protection under s. 49, Regulation VIII of 1793, unless his zamindar can prove a title to enhance rent under s. 51 of that law. RADHIKA CHOWDHRAIN v. RAM MOHUN GHOSH . 1 W. R., 367

76. ——— s. 51—Actual proprietors.—The "dependent talukhdars" mentioned in Regulation VIII of 1793 are actual proprietors, and not talukhdars whose talukhs are held under documents granted by proprietors which do not transfer property in the soil. The defendant was, therefore, held not exempt from liability to enhancement as being one of the latter. SUTTANEND GHOSAL v. HURO KISHORE DUTT . 15 W. R., 474

77. ——— Act X of 1859, s. 15.—A dependent talukh created before the Decennial Settlement is protected from enhancement by s. 51, Regulation VIII of 1793, except under the circumstances therein mentioned. In a suit by a zamindar for enhancement, brought after Act X of 1859 came into operation, against the holder at a fixed rent of a dependent talukh, the latter is protected from enhancement by the provisions of s. 15 of that Act, notwithstanding decrees pronounced in previous litigation between the parties declaring the zamindar's right to enhance, and directing that the rent of the talukh should be assessed at pargana rates, if it appear that the rent never has been assessed at pargana rates and never has been enhanced, but has remained unchanged from the time of the Permanent Settlement. Such decrees place the zamindar in no better position than other landlords who, previously to the passing of Act X of 1859, had a good right to enhance, but whose right, not having been exercised from the time of the Permanent Settlement, has been taken away by the

78. ——— Unregistered tenure.—A dependent talukhdar, under s. 51 of Regulation VIII of 1793, is not debarred from claiming the benefit of that section because his tenure had not been registered by the zamindar under s. 48 of that law. The onus of proving that a dependent talukhdar under s. 51 of the Regulation is liable to enhancement under the provisions of that section must fall on the zamindar. DOYAMOYEE CHOWDHRAIN v. 79. ——— Persons not personal cultivators.—In a suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate against tenants who held a "kaimi jote jumma,"—Held that the fact that they did not personally cultivate land, but held a jumma with raiyats under them, could never place them in the position of dependent talukhdars, and even if it could, Regulation VIII of 1793, s. 51, could not apply to them, unless they could show that their tenure existed, and was capable of being registered, at the date of the Decennial Settlement. ESHAN CHUNDER BANERJEE v. [24 W. R., 146]

80. ——— Person with lease terminable yearly or at will of zamindar.—S. 51, Regulation VIII of 1793, refers solely to dependent talukhdars, and cannot be applied so as to protect from enhancement a person whose tenure is terminable at the end of any year or at the pleasure or caprice of his zamindar. KALENDHUN BANERJEE v. ROMESH CHUNDER DUTT . . . 3 W. R., 172

81. ——— Nature of tenure.—In a suit for enhancement of rent under Regulation VIII of 1793 the nature of the tenure is a material question, irrespectively of the question whether the rent is fixed or variable, the nature and extent of the proof which the plaintiff (zamindar) is bound to give being different according as the tenure falls within s. 49 or s. 51 of the Regulation. The rulings of the High Court holding that in order to bring a talukh within s. 51 of the Regulation, it is sufficient to show that it existed and was capable of being registered in the zamindari sherishtas at the time of the Decennial Settlement, approved of. BAMA SOONDURKE DORSEE v. VIII of 1793, although not duly registered by the zamindar. Held that the defendant having made out a strong prima facie case to prove that he and those through whom he claimed had held the talukh at a fixed rent from a date more than twelve years prior to the Decennial Settlement, and the zamindar having relied on the weakness of the defence and having failed to show that the rent had varied, the tenure was exempt from re-assessment. MOHAMMAD DOSAHS v. 63. ———— Accretion to zimma tenure with fixed rent.—Where a permanent zimma tenure has been held at one rate of rent for more than twenty years, the terms of s. 15, Act X of 1859, as well as the provisions of s. 51, Regulation VIII of 1793, preclude the zamindar from assessing accretions to the parent talukh. JUGUT CHUNDER DUTT v. PANIOTY. . . . 8 W. R., 427

64. ———— Raiyati kadimi tenure.—Where a zamindar, a purchaser from a mortgagee, sued to enhance the rent of lands (part of the purchased zamindari) held on a raiyati kadimi tenure, which had existed more than twelve years before the Decennial Settlement, but the holder of which had subsequently accepted a pottah from the zamindar,—Held the acceptance of such pottah did not debar the tenant from the right of exemption from enhancement to which he was entitled by reason of the nature of his tenure. Such a pottah may be confirmatory only, and is not inconsistent with the presumption that a prior title existed. Sembie—A claim to exempt a tenure from enhancement on the ground that it is a raiyati kadimi tenure does not fall within Regulation VIII of 1793, s. 51. RAM CHUNDER DUTT v. — Beng. Reg. VIII of 1793, ss. 48-52—Beng. Reg. XLIV of 1793, ss. 2-5.—A purchaser of a zamindari at a public sale may, by virtue of his ordinary right as zamindar, enhance the rent of a dependent talukh from time to time under the provisions of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, and is not barred from so doing by the provisions of s. 5 of Bengal Regulation XLIV of 1793. The words "for the same period as the term of their own engagements with Government" in s. 48 of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793 refer to the period of the Decennial Settlement, and do not mean "in perpetuity" Doorga Choudhree v. Chundernath Bhadraroy, S. D. A. (1852), 642, dissented from. In an enhancement suit of the nature indicated above, the rate of rent to be fixed as payable by the under-tenureholder must ordinarily be fixed with reference to the rents paid by raiyats within the tenure itself, and not with reference to those paid by raiyats in the neighbourhood outside the limits of the tenure. BIASABORI DEBI CHOWDHRAIN v. 67. ———— Grounds of enhancement.—The grounds of enhancement stated in s. 51 of Regulation VIII of 1793, and not those in s. 17 of Act X of 1859, are applicable to dependent talukhdars. HIRONATH ROY v. HINDOO BASHINER DEBIA. . . . 3 W. R., Act X, 26

68. ———— Act X of 1859, ss. 13, 17.—In a suit for enhancement on one of the grounds set forth in s. 17, Act X of 1859, the notice under s. 13 can be served on a raiyat with rights of occupancy; but in a case of a dependent talukhdar the plaintiff must proceed under s. 51, Regulation VIII of 1793, and not on the grounds laid down in s. 17, Act X of 1859. The defendant's talukh in this case being a shikmi one, the suit under s. 17 was informal, and was accordingly dismissed. BRISO SCONDER MITTER MOZOOMDAR v. KALSH KISHORE CHOWDERY [8 W. R., 496]

69. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 15.—A dependent talukhdar's rent is not liable to enhancement, unless it can be shown to have changed since the Perpetual Settlement, and he must be proceeded against under s. 15 (not 17) of Act X of 1859. NUPKISHORE BOSE v. PANDUL SIRCAR. 6 W. R., 312

Expressions importing hereditary character of tenure.—The objection that the documents relied on by the defendant in support of their mokurari title contained no expressions importing the hereditary character of the alleged tenures was held to be one not open to the plaintiff in a suit for enhancement, where the pleadings admitted the existence of the tenure and the lawful occupation of the defendant, and the only question was whether the tenures were held at a variable or at a fixed and invariable rent. Even if the objection were open to the plaintiff, it was held that it could not prevail against the evidence which the record afforded that for upwards of a century the talukhs in question had been treated as hereditary, and as such had descended from father to son, and been the subject of purchase. GOPAL LALL TAGOR v. The tenure was admittedly a permanent one. 101. ———— Lease not finally fixing rent—Failure to specify duration.—An amulnamah, by which the defendant, for clearing and cultivating chur lands, was to pay no rent for the first three years, and then a low rate of rent gradually rising till it reached a certain rate, no period being fixed for the duration of such last-mentioned rate, was held to be no bar to the plaintiff's right of enhancement. PUDDO MONEE DOSSIA v. 102. ———— Lease of land uncleared—Land let for purpose of clearing at low rent afterwards to be higher.—When land is let for the purpose of clearing jungle, or other reclamation, and on this ground, or any other ground mentioned in the lease, a reduced rent is provided for the first few years, and it is said that the rent is to be at a certain rate as the full rent, such rent is not liable to enhancement. HUBO PRASAD ROY CHOWDERY v. CHUNDER CHURN BOYRAGER

103. ———— Act I of 1845, s. 26, cl. 4—Jungle land.—The words "such land continuing to be used for the purposes specified in the lease" in cl. 4, s. 26, Act I of 1845, do not restrain the effect of a lease for clearing land of jungle solely to such time as jungle remains to be cut on the land, but should be taken to mean that the lease will stand good as long as the land is kept clear of jungle, and not allowed to fall back into its old state. If a pottah gives the tenant power to extend his lease beyond the land originally made over to him under the pottah, and gives the same rent for the additional land as for the other land, such additional land is not assessable with the pargana rate of rent, but the pottah is good and binding even on an auction-purchaser as respects the whole of the land cultivated by the tenant. WATSON & CO. v. 104. ——— Lease containing no term for expiry—Improvement of land—Agency of raiyat—Improvement by other means.—When a pottah contains no term and does not provide against enhancement, and the tenant has not occupied for twelve years, if it is shown that the tenant has improved the land, he will be entitled to a proportionate reduction in determining the rent he should pay. But if it is also shown that the value of land generally in the neighbourhood has increased irrespective of the agency of the raiyat, the landlord will be entitled to enhancement proportionate to that improvement. *MATHURA MOHUN SAHA v. 105. ——— Transferee of lease—Construction of lease—Liability to enhancement.—A lease contained the following words:—"You shall continue to pay the sum of sicca RS fixed on the whole as sicca jumma of the said mouzah every year, and having cleared the villages of jungle and having brought the lands under cultivation, yourself and through others, as usual, enjoy and occupy the same with your sons and grandsons in succession." Held that the lease conveyed an absolute interest, and that the grantee and his heirs were entitled to transfer it; and that a transferee, not an auction-purchaser, was not liable to enhancement of rent. WATSON & CO. v. JOGESHAN ATTAN

[Marsh., 330:2 May, 436

106. ——— Lease stipulating against enhancement—"Year by year."—The stipulation in a pottah, "after this in no manner shall enhancement be demanded," precludes enhancement during the existence of the pottah, notwithstanding in a preceding part of the pottah the words "year by year" are used (BAYLEY, J., dissentiente). PURNANUN BOON v. PEARY MOHUN DEB. . . . 3 W. R., 225

107. ——— Solehnamah stipulating against enhancement—Construction of solehnamah.—A member of a Hindu family, who had the management of the ancestral property, was sued by one of the tenants for illegal distraint. Plaintiff put in a pottah in which the rent was described as a fixed rent, and the tenancy an old and existing tenancy. The result of that suit was a solehnamah or compromise between the parties, in which the manager fixed or confirmed the rent of the tenure, and agreed that the rent should not be enhanced. Held that the effect of the solehnamah was to confer upon the tenant and his descendants a maurasi mokurari right in the land at a fixed rent, as far as the manager was capable of conferring such a right. BHOORUNMOHUN DOSSEN v. DHONAYE KARIGUR. 15 W. R., 434

108. ——— Decree allowing enhancement—Subsequent transfer of estate.—A childless Hindu widow granted a pottah to defendant. On her death there was a dispute as to the heirship to her husband, and the right of plaintiff's vendor having been declared, the latter brought a suit against defendant for a kabuliati at enhanced rates of rent. Defendant disputed the claim, setting up the title of the opposite party, but the suit was decreed to the extent of the rate of rent admitted by defendant. Subsequently plaintiff issued a notice of enhancement, and defendant, not coming to terms, sued to set aside the pottah and obtain possession. Held that the decree obtained by plaintiff's vendor created a new contract between the parties under the kabuliati, by which defendant was entitled to hold at the rent admitted by him till plaintiff took further steps; and that plaintiff's vendor having conveyed his whole title to plaintiff, who then gave defendant distinct notice, plaintiff was entitled to succeed in the present suit. *JUGGESUR BUTTOHYAL v. 110. ——— Decree in accordance with defendant's admission—Beng. Act VII of 1869, s. 14—Suit for arrears of rent—Rate of rent payable.—The plaintiff sued for arrears of rent for the year 1282 at the rate of RS-8 per bigha. The defendant alleged that the rent was only fifteen annas per bigha. The Judge found that the plaintiff had not proved that the rate of rent was RS-8 per bigha, and, without finding that the proper rate was fifteen annas, gave the plaintiff a decree for that amount. The plaintiff brought a subsequent suit for arrears of rent for the year 1283, when it was held by the Court of first instance and by the lower Appellate Court that he could only recover arrears of rent at the rate of fifteen annas, that being the rate of "rent payable for the previous year" within the meaning of s. 14, Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Held that the decisions were wrong, and must be reversed. *PURNOO SINGH v. 112. — Agreement to take rent as long as holdings continue—Right to enhance—Exemption from enhancement.—Where the relative rights of the parties as landlord and tenants were determined by competent authority, and the matter referred for decision of the Collector was the commutation of the rents paid in kind into money rents, and that officer in so doing decided the rights of the parties declaring the tenants sub-proprietors and directing them to pay at the revenue rates with an addition of 5 per cent. allowance to the landlord. Held that the landlord, notwithstanding his failure to set aside the order and his receipt of the amount so fixed, was not precluded from enhancing the rent on any of the grounds specified in s. 17, Act X of 1859. Where a wajib-ul-urz stated that "the hereditary tenants in the village pay their rents like the proprietors, and so long as they shall continue to pay their rents, they and their heirs shall continue to cultivate their holdings." Held that, on the terms of the wajib-ul-urz, the defendants could not claim exemption from enhancement. *BHSEE v. 116. — Agreement not to enhance, Duration of Liability to enhancement. On the 27th June 1866 it was agreed between B, a zamindar, and D, a raiyat, that the latter should pay B20 annually as the rent of his holding, and that for the future no further sum in excess should be demanded or suit brought for enhancement of rent. The settlement of the district where the land in respect of which the agreement was made was situated expired on 1st July 1870. B having subsequently enhanced D's rent to R40, D brought a suit to contest his liability to pay enhanced rent, basing his suit on the agreement of 27th June 1866. The lower Courts held that B was not bound by the agreement after the expiry of the settlement in force at the time of the agreement, and directed D to pay an enhanced rate of rent. Shortly afterwards, the defendants executed a kabuliat at a reduced rate, for eleven years ending the 31st Assin 1282 (16th October 1875). After the term had expired, the plaintiffs sought to recover rent from the defendants at the rate settled by the decree of 1864. Held that the decree had been superseded by the subsequent arrangement, and that the plaintiffs could not recover rent at an enhanced rate, except under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. *NOBIN CHUNDER BIRCAH v. Held per PRACOCK, C.J. (dissenting from BAYLEY, J., and KEMP, J.), that, independently of the dowl, it might be presumed, from the great differences between the rent at which the lands were held and the present value of the lands, that the occupation at the low rent had been continued as of right, and not merely by the sufferance of the zamindar, and that such occupation at the same rent had existed twelve years before the date of Regulation VIII of 1793. Per BAYLEY, J., that, independently of the dowl, the facts did not satisfy such a presumption; but that, if the dowl were proved, then it might be presumed that the occupation at the same rent had commenced twelve years before the date of the Regulation. Per KEMP, J., that, even if the dowl were proved, the presumption would not arise. BROJUNGGOYA DASSEE v. 156. — Sufficiency of proof—Act X of 1859, s. 4—Presumption.—In a suit for enhancement of rent, where defendant claimed the benefit of the presumption arising under s. 4, Act X of 1859, it was held that his sworn declaration that the rent had not varied for more than twenty years, corroborated by the records of the Collectorate, which showed that the rent was the same as it had been more than thirty years ago, was sufficient to warrant the presumption, seeing that plaintiff had failed to show any intermediate variation. RAJ DOOLLAH v. MOHESUR BHUTT . 10 W. R., 364

157. — Act X of 1859, s. 4—Admission of plaintiff.—In a suit for enhancement of rent, plaintiff's admission that defendant had held the tenure for thirty or thirty-two years at the same rent was held not to amount to an admission that the land had been held at that rate of rent from the Permanent Settlement, and that plaintiff should have an opportunity allowed him of rebutting any presumption which might arise from that admission. PEARNE MOHUN DUTT v. RADHA MADHUS MOOKERJEE 10 W. R., 427

158. — Act X of 1859, s. 4—Decrees for arrears of rent.—In a suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate, where defendant pleaded the presumption arising under s. 4, Act X of 1859, and plaintiff produced in support of his claim a decree of 1860, declaring him entitled to the enhanced rent and a later decree for arrears on the same scale,—Held that the fact that the later decree had only been executed in part, and that defendants never paid more than Rs 4 to the Government, did not neutralise the effect of the decrees as the very best evidence that the rents had varied since the Decennial Settlement. WOODOY NARAIN SINGH v. TARINER CHURN ROY . . . 11 W. R., 496

159. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 4—Presumption.—The presumption allowed by s. 4, Act X of 1859, of holding certain orchard land at a uniform rent since the Permanent Settlement was held not to be removed by defendant's statement that the orchard was planted more than forty years ago; and it was for plaintiffs to prove it to have been made since the Permanent Settlement. SOODHITER LALL CHOWDHRY v. 162. ———— Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 4—Presumption.—In a suit for enhanced rent after notice, where defendant pleaded that he had for more than twenty years paid at the same rate, —Held that he was entitled to the presumption under s. 4 of the Rent Law, unless plaintiff could prove that defendant's tenure commenced at some date subsequent to the Decennial Settlement. ASHBUT ALI v. Act VIII of 1869, s. 4—Presumption.*—In a suit relating to four jummas in the possession of the same persons in which it was proved that three of the jummas had been held at the same rent for twenty years, but that the fourth, having only been purchased eighteen years previously by the said persons, had not been longer in their own possession, —Held that the presumption might arise that the jumma itself had been held at an unchanged rent for twenty years, and that the lower Courts were justified in inferring that such had been the case. RADHAMOYE DUTY CHOWDHRY v. chitti showing that they had long held at existing rates, and there was no evidence to prove that the land had not been held at those uniform rates from the Permanent Settlement, or that such rent had been fixed at some later period, the plaintiffs were held entitled to the presumption prescribed by Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 4. RAM BHUROSHE SINGH v. MAHOMED ASGURER KHAN . . . 19 W. R., 205

165. ———— Enhancement of rent, Suit for—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 4—Presumption of evidence.—In a suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rates, where the defendant relies on the presumption contained in s. 4 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, it is not sufficient, in order to do away with that presumption, to show that the land has not been in cultivation from the time of the Permanent Settlement. It must be shown that the land has not been held since the time of the Permanent Settlement. PRARI MOHAN MUKHERJI v. BANSHI MAJHI [1 L. R., 11 Cal., 757]

166. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 4—Evidence to establish presumption of uniform rent.—A raiyat is not bound to file dakhilas in order to establish the presumption allowed by Act X of 1859, s. 4, if he can establish it by other good independent evidence. RADHA GORIND ROY v. 167. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 4—Enhancement on ground of there being excess land.—The rent of a tenure protected from enhancement under the provisions of s. 4, Act X of 1859, cannot be increased on the ground of the tenure containing excess land. DECOURCY v. MEGHNATH JHA [15 W. R., 157]

168. ———— Enhancement on ground of there being excess land—Act X of 1859, ss. 15 and 16—Presumption of uniform rent.—In a suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rates, where defendant pleads the provisions of ss. 15 and 16, Act X of 1859, if it is found that the tenure has been held at a uniform rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement, the plaintiff has no right to enhance the rent, even though the land in possession of defendant may be in excess of that covered by the original tenure. If, on the other hand, the excess land was not included in the original tenure, but obtained subsequently without the consent of the plaintiff, the possession of the defendant must be considered adverse, and the suit must fail for want of privity. INDRO BHOSUN DEB v. 169. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 4—Pleadings.—Per NORMAN and HOBHOUSE, JJ. 172. ———— Time for which the rent has been uniform.—Uniform payment must be shown, if not for every year in the twenty years, at least for the greater portion of that period, and for years in the earlier, as well as in the later, portion of the same. SURENMOYEE DASSEE v. SHAM MUNDUL
[9 W. R., 270]

173. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 16—Rent of talukh—Presumption.—S. 16, Act X of 1859, does not require proof of actual payment of one rate of rent for twenty years, but that the rent has remained unchanged for that period. Uniform rent for the twenty years preceding the suit ought not to be presumed upon evidence which only touches a portion of that period; on the other hand, it is not necessary to have evidence bearing directly on every one of the twenty years. It is sufficient if the whole time is included within limits upon which the evidence bears, provided the evidence leads to the belief of uniform rent. FOSCHOLA v. HUBO CHUNDER ROSE

175. ———— Presumption—Act X of 1859, s. 4.—Proof of uniform payment of rent up to the date of suit is not absolutely necessary to entitle a raiyat to the benefit of the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859, in a case when the landlord

(c) VARIATION BY CHANGE IN NATURE OF RENT AND BY ALTERATION OF TENURE.

177. ———— Uniformity in rate—Variation.—Uniformity in the amount actually paid is not required to raise the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859, but uniformity in the rate agreed upon, either expressly or impliedly, between the parties to be paid. MORAN & Co. v. 178. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 4—Rent changed in amount, but at same rate.—The words of s. 4, Act X of 1859, refer to the rate as well as the amount of rent. Therefore, where from 1839 to 1858 a raiyat had paid rent at the same rate, but in 1858 the rent was, by order of the Civil Court, changed, and a proportionate amount remitted in consequence of a portion of the land having been lost by diluvion,—Held that the remaining portion of the rent being levied at the same rate as before, the raiyat had not lost his right to avail himself of the provisions of s. 4, Act X of 1859. BIAS-UNISSA v. 179. ———— Rent in kind (bhaoli)—Act X of 1859, ss. 3 and 4—Semble.—A tenant who has paid at the same bhaoli rate,—i.e., in kind—for a period of twenty years is entitled to the presumption of s. 4, Act X of 1859, and to exemption from enhancement under s. 8. RAM DAYAL SINGH v. LATCHMI NARAYAN

181. ———— Rent in kind, (bhaoli) varying with amount of yearly produce—Act X of 1859, ss. 3 and 4—Act XVIII of 1873, ss. 3 and 6.—A rent in kind (bhaoli) which, though it varies yearly in amount with the varying amount of the yearly produce, is fixed as to the proportion it is to bear to such produce, is a fixed rent within the meaning of s. 3 of Act X of 1859 (corresponding with s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1873). A tenant, therefore, in a permanently-settled district holding his land at such a rent is entitled to claim the presumption of law declared in s. 4 of Act X of 1859 (corresponding with s. 6 of Act XVIII of 1873), if he proves that, for a period of twenty years next before the commencement of the suit to enhance his rent, he has paid the same proportion of the produce of his holding. HANUMAN PARSAD v. KAULSAR PANDAY

182. ———— Abatement of rent for unculturable land—Act X of 1859, s. 4.—Where an abatement of rent was allowed in a lump sum upon a lump jumma on account of lands having been rendered unculturable by the overflow of a river, the abatement was held not to vary the rate of rent so as to debar the raiyat from the benefit of the presumption under Act X of 1859, s. 4. RADHA GONDD ROY v. KRAMUTOOLLAN. 31 W. R., 401

183. ———— Alteration in rate—Proof of variation—Payment by tenant.—A mere alteration in the rate of rent on the part of a zamindar or person other than the tenant will not prove a variation, unless it be shown that the tenant submitted to or paid that varied and enhanced rate. GOPAL MUNDUL v. NORBO KISHEN MOOKERJEE
[5 W. R., Act X, 68]

184. ———— Variation of rent shown in dakhilas—Average of payments of rent.—Where dakhilas are relied upon to prove uniformity of rent and any variation in the dakhilas is found to exist, there must be a distinct finding as to whether the short payments of one year were made up the next year, the variation prima facie being evidence that the rent was not uniform. RAMJADOO GANGOOLEY v. LUCKHEE NARAIN MUNDUL. 9 W. R., 466

185. ———— Additional illegal cess for additional land—Immaterial variation.—Additional rent for additional land, and the addition of a small illegal cess, are not such variations of the proper rent as deprive the tenant of the presumption arising from twenty years' payment of uniform rent. SOMERROODREN LUSHKUR v. HIRONATH ROY

187. ———— Immaterial variation.—The variation of a few annas in the dakhilas, when not proved to be a variation in the annual rents, is not sufficient to deprive the raiyat of the benefit of the presumption. TARA SOONDREY BURMONYA v. SHIBESUR CHATTERJEE

188. ———— Nominal reduction in jumma—Immaterial variation.—A nominal reduction in the jumma of one anna and three pies, and that too in the raiyat's favour, is not a variation that deprives him of the benefit of the presumption created by s. 4, Act X of 1859. But the acceptance of a temporary kabulist annals such presumption. RAMBUTRO SIRCAR v. CHUNDER MOOHEE DEHA

HILLS v. HUNO LAL SEN. 3 W. R., Act X, 135

190. ———— Material difference—Difference in amount.—The difference between R11-13 and R18-4 was held sufficient to destroy the presumption of a uniform payment of rent. BISSESSUR CHUCKERBUTTY v. WOOMACHURN ROY
[7 W. R., 44]

191. ———— Rent paid in different coinage.—Rent is not altered by being paid in a different coinage, viz., in kaldar instead of sicca rupees, and the apparent addition of one anna per rupee (the difference in value between the two kinds of rupees) is not a real addition to the rent. ROOHA RAM MISR v. NAGA DOSS. 9 N. W., 92

192. ———— Variation of rent from change of currency.—A variation of rent from change of currency only is not a variation rebutting the presumption arising from uniform payment for more than twenty years. RAM COOMAR MOOKERJEE v. RUGOONATH MUNDUL. 1 W. R., 256

193. — Consolidation of jummas—
Act X of 1859, s. 4.—A consolidation of jummas into one tenure does not deprive the raiyat of the benefit of the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859, if it can be shown that the rent has not been changed. This principle applies also to jummas which have been derived in part or in whole with the consent of the landlord, and which are subsequently consolidated into one jumma. The presumptions of s. 4 are not restricted to holdings, but refer simply to the fact that land has been held by a raiyat at a rent which has not been changed for twenty years before the commencement of the suit. RAJ KISHORE MOOKERJEE v. HURENHUR MOOKERJEE

194. — Holding created since Decennial Settlement.—He must be entitled to the presumption in respect of the whole tenure as consolidated. [21 W. R., 267]

195. — Presumption.—The consolidation of several holdings into one, or the omission of fractions by the settlement officer, cannot deprive a raiyat of the benefit of the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859. LUKSHI MONI HALDAR v. GUNGA GORIND MUNDLE

KHODA NEWAL v. NUDO KISHORE ROY
[5 W. R., Act X, 53]

196. — Division of holding among heirs—Preservation of continuity of holding.—The division of a raiyat's holding among his heirs, the continuity of the holding not being destroyed, does not deprive the raiyat of the benefit of the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859. In the latter case the default of one shareholder will vitiate the tenure of all, and give the landlord a right of enhancement. HILLS v. BASHARUTTE MARR
[1 W. R., 10]

197. — Division of tenure—Act X of 1859, s. 4—Extent of proof necessary.—In order to bring himself within ss. 3 and 4, Act X of 1859, a raiyat need only show that the particular land which is the subject of suit, not the whole tenure of which it may once have formed a part, has been held at an unchanged rent since the Permanent Settlement. It is not necessary that the land should have remained a separate holding. KASHEBATH NUSKE v. BAMA SOORDARY DOSSEA

198. — Variation of rent of undivided fractional share—Act X of 1859, s. 4—Presumption of uniformity.—A change in the rent of an undivided fractional part of a tenure is to be considered as a change in the rent of the whole tenure, and therefore destroys the presumption to be raised under s. 4, Act X of 1859. MAHOMED MUDDHEEN MIRZA v. GOPAL LALL TAGORE
[2 Hay, 514]

199. — Distribution of rent after sale of portion of tenure—Beng. 200. — Temporary holding by one of several joint owners under arrangement—Act X of 1859, s. 4.—A temporary arrangement among joint owners by which one of their number is allowed to hold a portion of the joint property on payment of a certain sum of money does not convert the occupier into a raiyat holding at a fixed rent or entitle him to the benefit of the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859. BOGHOOBUN TEWARI v. BISHEN DUTT DOBEY
[2 W. R., Act X, 62]

201. — Partition—Evidence of previous enhancement in a suit by another co-samindar—Talukh—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 17.—More than twenty years before the institution of a suit for the enhancement of the rent of a share in a dependent talukh, the samindari under which the talukh was held was partitioned under a batwara among three zamindars. A ten-anna share was allotted to one (the present plaintiff), a four-anna share to another, and a two-anna share to a third. The talukhdars continued to hold the entire property, and paid the rent apportioned by law severally to each of the parties entitled. In 1861, the owner of the two-anna share obtained a decree against the talukhdars for enhancement of the rent of his share. In the present suit against the same talukhdars, the defendants contended that the rent of their talukh had not been changed for a period of more than twenty years before suit. Held that the "talukh," which was intended by s. 17 of the Rent Act, was the original talukh; and that, if the defendants could show that the rent of that talukh had remained unchanged, either in its original entirety or apportioned as it had been under the batwara, they would be entitled to the benefit of the section; but that the decree in the suit of 1861 had the effect of enhancing the rent payable for the whole talukh, and that the plaintiff could avail herself of that decree, although she was not a party to it. SARAT SOORDARY DARRA v. 222. ——— Suit after permission to hold at old rent—Subsequent to declaration of right to enhance.—In a former suit brought by a raiyat against the holder under a temporary ijarā extending down to 1871, a decree was passed maintaining the ijaradar's right to enhance. But notwithstanding this decree, the raiyat was by express agreement allowed, and in fact continued, to hold at the old rates. On the expiration of the ijarā, the zamindar entered upon the lands, and after collecting a part of the rents for 1872 gave the plaintiff a patni of the estate from 1873, and an assignment of the right to collect the uncollected portion of the rents of 1873. The plaintiff now sues to recover from the defendant the rent for the remainder of 1872 and for 1873 at the enhanced rates decreed to the ijaradar. Held that neither the zamindar nor the patnidar could recover enhanced rents from the raiyat without some notice. BODHNARAIN SINGH v. (b) FORM AND SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE, AND INFORMALITIES IN.

225. ———— Accuracy and precision in notice—Notice to pay lump sum on land in possession.—A notice of enhancement must be reasonably accurate and precise. A notice to pay a lump sum on the whole land in and out of defendant's possession is not sufficient. TARACHAND ROY v. KEENARAM KURMOKAR . W. R., 1864, Act X, 118.

226. ———— Prospective notice—Disadvantage to tenant.—A notice of enhancement should not be prospective, the principle being that the raiyat should be prepared to meet the claim on grounds existing at the time the notice is received. BEJRATH KOENWAR v. SAMES KOENWAR . [12 W. R., 539]

227. ———— Requisites for notice—Precise nature of claim.—The great strictness with which cases involving questions as to the form of notice of enhancement were dealt with has been relaxed in the later practice of this Court, and it has been held in the later rulings that a notice is good if, without containing the exact terms of the law, it states with sufficient precision the nature of the claim, the amount asked for, and the grounds on which the enhancement is sought, so that the raiyat served with the notice may not be misled, and can clearly comprehend the case which he has to meet. MCGIVERAN v. HURRHOOD SINGH . 19 W. R., 208.

228. ———— Notice based on simple ground of rents having become less—Abatement—Beng. Reg. VIII of 1793, s. 51.—A notice of enhancement of the rent of a talukh on the simple ground of the rents having become less by decrease is not based on the "abatement" contemplated by s. 51, Regulation VIII of 1793, or any of the other grounds specified in that section. NUMO KRISTO MOJOMBAR v. 231. ———— Specification of rent and grounds of enhancement—Dependent talukhdars—Reg. VIII of 1793, ss. 48 and 51—Non-registration.—Tenants holding a permanent transferable interest intermediate between the proprietor and the raiyats, and one which has been in existence from the time of the Decennial Settlement, are entitled, before they can be sued for enhancement of rent, to a notice which not only specifies the rent, but also states the ground on which enhancement is claimed, and shows how the landlord has the right of enhancement, as well as the particular ground on which the rent is to be raised. The fact of not having been registered under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1793, s. 48, does not deprive them of the benefit of s. 51. NILMONY SINGH v. RAM CHUCKERABUTTY . [21 W. R., 439]

SHIB NARAIN GHOSH v. AUKHIL CHUNDER MOOKERJEE . . . 22 W. R., 485

232. ———— Specification of general grounds—Proof of grounds specified.—A notice of enhancement of an intermediate tenure, specifying that the tenant holds more lands than he originally did, and that the productive powers of the land and the value of the produce have increased otherwise than by the agency or at the expense of the tenant, is sufficient if the grounds are proved to exist, and if the rent claimed as fair and equitable is not more than is paid by the holders of similar tenures in the pargannah or neighbourhood. GHISE CHUNDER GHOSH v. BANTOWOO BISWAS . . . 12 W. R., 449

233. ———— Specification of particular grounds—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 18—Schedule appended to notice.—In notices of enhancement of rent it is absolutely necessary that in the statement of grounds there should be some words to show that it is the intention of the landlord to proceed under some particular clause or clauses of s. 18, Bengal Act VIII of 1869. It is not sufficient to leave this to be inferred from a schedule appended to the notice. HOORUL MUNDER v. HURBUCK DUTT KHOWAS . [22 W. R., 429]

234. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 19—Sufficiency of notice of enhancement.—It is not sufficient for a notice of enhancement of rent to allege generally the grounds of enhancement mentioned in s. 17, Act X of 1859. It should set forth specific and tangible grounds of enhancement applicable to the particular case. DWARAKA NATH CHOWDHRY v. BIREJOY GORIND BURAL . 10 W. R., 388

237. ——— Indefinite and uncertain notice.—Notice of enhancement should distinctly set forth the grounds upon which enhancement of rent is sought. Notice of enhancement to the effect "that as the rent of the land" (in the occupation of the tenant) "is below the rates prevailing in the pergunnah and in adjacent places, and as the productive powers of the land and the value of the produce have increased, and as the petit lands have been cultivated, I am entitled to receive from you Rs 794-5-7-11½ per annum," was held to be indefinite and uncertain; and therefore no suit thereon could lie for enhancement of rent. GOBIND KUMAR CHOWDEY v. [7 B. L. R., Ap., 32]

240. ——— In a suit for enhancement of rent of an intermediate tenure, a notice to the following effect was held sufficient: "You (defendant) hold a takshishi talukh, the rent of which has always been of a varying nature; you have been called upon to make a settlement with your landlord at the pergunnah rates; by the immemorial custom of the pergunnah, the holders of such talukhs as yours, after deducting 10 per cent. of the fair jumma for collection charges, and 10 per cent. for malikana, are bound to pay the residue as rent to the zamindar. You hold so much land which, according to rates paid for similar kinds of land in the same and adjacent villages, ought to pay such and such a gross rental; from this, deducting your 20 per cent. on account of malikana and collection charges, the remainder (so much) ought to be paid to me as my rent, and you are hereby called upon to pay that amount." JANNORA v. [17 W. R., 356]

243. ——— Notice with ground incorrectly stated—"Surrounding rates"—Act X of 1859, s. 17.—That a tenant is holding at a rent lower than surrounding rates is not a sufficient ground to be specified in a notice of enhancement; the words "surrounding rates" being not tantamount to the ground of enhancement indicated in s. 17, Act X of 1859. BOYDONATH v. 244. ——— Notice not stating quantity of land—Excess land.—A notice under s. 13, Act X of 1859, for enhancement of rent upon land held by a raiyat in excess of the land for which he pays rent to the zamindar, must state the quantity of land so held in excess. The mere statement of "excess land" is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law. GRISH CHANDRA GHOSH v. ISWAR CHANDRA MOOKERJEE

Enquiry as to rate of rent paid by neighbouring raiyats.—In a suit for enhancement of rent where the raiyats plead that their relations with the samindar are peculiar, it is not sufficient for a notice to set forth, and for a Court to find, that the rent paid in respect of the land in dispute is lower than the rent paid in respect of neighbouring lands: the Court is bound to enquire into the status and situation of the defendant's raiyats with those of the raiyats of the neighbouring lands. LALLA ROGHOBUN SANYAL v. The only limit to the landlord's power of enhancement after notice is the fairness and reasonableness of the rent. SREBOPAUL MULLICK v. DWARKANATH SHIN 15 W. R., 520

249. ——— Notice in case of distinct holdings—Act X of 1859, s. 18.—A landlord serving notice of enhancement under s. 18, Act X of 1859, has no right to consolidate distinct and independent holdings, without the consent of the raiyat. grounds for claiming such enhanced rent. UDOYTARA CHOWDERAIN v. SHRI NATH SURMA BANADOURI 9 C. L. R., 207

251. ——— Separate holdings.—A notice of enhancement of rent need not be on a separate piece of paper for each holding; all that is required is that it shall be so distinct for each holding that the tenant may be able to distinguish those in respect of which he does not object to the enhanced rent, from others in respect of which he declines to pay it. McGIVERN v. 252. ——— Notice in case of land consisting of two or more plots—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 18.—When the lands the rent of which is sought to be enhanced consist of more than one plot, it is not sufficient for the landlord to serve the tenant with a notice of enhancement, specifying all the three grounds of enhancement mentioned in s. 18 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Such notice should specify the particular ground or grounds on which each separate plot is alleged to be liable to enhancement. Semble—This would not be so if the same ground or grounds applied to every plot the rent of which is sought to be enhanced. If in a suit for enhancement the plaintiff fails to prove that he has served the defendant with a proper notice, the Court is not bound to make a declaratory decree, but whether it shall do so or not lies entirely in its discretion. GUNNES CHUNDER HAZRA v. 259. ———— Notice containing clerical error or omission—Immaterial error—Act X of 1859, s. 17.—Where a defendant has known perfectly well the grounds upon which enhancement of rent is demanded from him, a clerical omission which in no way prejudiced the defendant cannot operate to invalidate the notice of enhancement under s. 17, Act X of 1859. RYSSUNHISA BAOUM v. BYDONATH SANA 17 W. R., 364

260. ———— Notice where defendant was aware of ground of enhancement—Act X of 1859, s. 17.—The object of the notice of enhancement is that the defendant may know what are the grounds on which the plaintiff seeks to enhance his rent, so that he may have an opportunity of coming forward to contest any of those grounds; and as the defendant's own answer in the case showed that he was fully aware of and came forward to contest the main ground on which the plaintiff sought to enhance his rent, the notice issued by plaintiff was held to be sufficient to meet the requirements of s. 17, Act X of 1859. TIRTH NUND THAKUR v. MONUM MUNDUL 17 W. R., 278

261. ———— Informality in notice.—Informality in a notice for enhancement of rent was not allowed to prevail in this case, where the defect was held to have been made good by the evidence on the record, and where there could be no doubt that the tenant knew exactly the nature of the demand he had to meet, and where also the objection was a mere after-thought and not put forward until after the order of remand by the High Court. WOOMA CHURN DUTT v. BRIAN CHUNDER BOSE [17 W. R., 32]

262. ———— Omission in notice.—Where a raiyat well knew and pleaded to the grounds of enhancement, the mere omission of the words "same class of raiyats" in the notice was held not fatal to the plaintiff's suit. Nor was the omission of the words "otherwise than by the agency and at the expense of

263. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 17.—The omission of the words "same class of raiyat" in a notice under Act X of 1859, s. 17, even if unintentional, is sufficient to invalidate a claim for enhancement. Quærs—Would this be the case if, notwithstanding the omission, the raiyat knew all the grounds on which enhanced rent was demanded of him, and defended himself on all? SATYGOOLKAR KHAN v. CHAYA THAKOOR 18 W. R., 522

264. ———— Informality in notice—Dismissal of suit for want of proper notice—Obiter dicta.—Where a suit for enhancement of rent is dismissed on the ground that no notice was served, any decision in the Court's judgment as regards the māl or lakhiraj character of the land must be deemed to be mere obiter. Where it is found in such a suit that the notice did not state that the raiyat pays less than raiyats of the same class, the informality may be overlooked if there is evidence on the record of the rates of rent payable by such raiyat; but if there is no evidence of that nature, the suit must be dismissed. MOTHOORNATH SIRCAR v. NIL MONER DEO 18 W. R., 287

265. ———— Omission to specify among grounds stated those relied on.—The plea of informality of notice on the ground that it contained all the grounds of enhancement allowed by law without specifying any as those relied on was disallowed, inasmuch as the raiyat had not shown that he had been prejudiced thereby, or had been in any difficulty as to what he was called upon to answer. GOPKRNATH JANNAN v. 266. ———— Notice fully comprehended by tenant—Contesting suit for enhancement.—A raiyat who has received a notice of enhancement may be in a different position relative to its sufficiency according as he waits until a suit is brought against him, or comes into Court of his own accord to attack the notice. In the latter case, if he frames his suit on a thorough understanding of the notice, he cannot object to it as not reasonably sufficient. RAM BRU-ROSB SINGH v. MAHOMED ASGUREE KHAN [19 W. 267. ———— Mistake in notice—Notice erroneously including lakhiraj land.—A suit for enhancement should not be dismissed merely because the plaintiff has included in his notice of enhancement land belonging to the defendant's lakhiraj holding. CHUNDER COOMAR ROY v. BHOLA-NATH SIRCAR W. R., 1884, Act X, 110

268. ———— Notice erroneously including lakhiraj land.—A notice for enhancement, otherwise sufficient, is not invalidated because a portion of the lands claimed as enhanceable in such notice turns out to be rent-free land, but is good so far as it is applicable to the portion of the land which is liable to enhancement. NEWAJ BONDOPADHYA v. KALI PROSONNO GHOSH [I. L. R., 6 Calc., 543; 8 C. L. R., 6]

269. ———— Notice of enhancement in respect of portion of land.—Validity of notice.—Notice of enhancement, issued on the application of the person to whom the rent is payable, on account of any part of the land in respect of which the notice is served, is good for that part. GURDOO MULL v. HOOLAGNE 2 Agrs., 247

270. ———— Notice to talukhdar as for a raiyat.—Act X of 1859, s. 13.—The rent of a talukhdar cannot be enhanced under a notice treating him as a raiyat having a right of occupancy. DOTA-MOYEE CHOWDERAUN v. MOHIMA CHUNDER BOY [12 W. R., 187]

271. ———— Notice to non-cultivator treated as raiyat.—Where a party who was not personally a cultivator of the land, but held a large jumma with a number of raiyats below him, was treated, in a notice of enhancement under cl. 17, Act X of 1859, as an ordinary raiyat having a right of occupancy, it was held that the notice was not on that account illegal or informal. KALEE PROSONNO GHOSH v. HURRI CHUNDER DUTT. 15 W. R., 57

272. ———— Notice of excess after measurement.—Statement of proof of measurement.—In a suit for enhancement of rent after notice, on the allegation that the defendant holds land in excess of the area admitted by him to be in his occupation, it must be shown that the notice stated that such excess has been proved by measurement. KALEE KUMARY DASSEE v. SHUMBOO CHUNDER GHOSH [9 W. R., Act X, 23]

273. ———— Variation between notice of enhancement and plaint.—A plaintiff is not to be prejudiced by reason of his plaint demanding less rent than that specified in his notice to enhance, when such notice has not been disputed until after action brought. On the other hand, the plaintiff cannot recover higher rent than that demanded in the notice of enhancement. HILLS v. PANOM COURSE SHERKE 1 W. R., 3

274. ———— Notice not followed immediately by suit.—Validity of, for future suit.—Act X of 1859, s. 13.—The object of s. 13, Act X of 1859, is that a suit for enhancement should not be brought without previous due notice, and not that when a notice under that section has been once duly given, if the tenant does not immediately, on service of notice, give up the tenure, a suit for enhanced rents for the next and following years must be brought within the mid year. MAHOMED BOHIMUDDIN v. 275. ———— Notice, Effect of, as regards rent after suit.—In a suit for arrears of rent of a particular year, after notice of enhancement on specified grounds, plaintiff (if his title is established) can only have a decree for the arrears claimed, and on one or other of the grounds alleged. The Judge has no jurisdiction in appeal to declare his right to any enhanced rents for the future. BHOORUN MOHINER DASSEE v. KEDARNATH BOSE . 12 W. R., 141

276. ———— Notice omitting grounds of enhancement.—Act X of 1859, s. 13.—Auction-purchaser.—Under s. 13, Act X of 1859, a raiyat served with a notice of enhancement, which is silent about the ground of enhancement, is not liable to pay the higher rent. An auction-purchaser is no exception to the rule by which every landlord is bound to ascertain the nature, extent, and conditions of his raiyat's holding before he serves him with a notice of enhancement. A raiyat is competent to object to the legality of a notice of enhancement even in a suit in which he is plaintiff. LALLA SINGH v. BRAZOOHISSA [8 W. R., 271]

278. ———— Notice on first of grounds stated in s. 17.—Act X of 1859, s. 17, cl. 1.—Sembie (by MARKEE, J.).—That when a landlord gives notice of enhancement to a tenant on the first of the grounds stated in s. 17, Act X of 1859, he treats him as a raiyat having a right of occupancy. THAKOON DUTT SINGH v. GOPAL SINGH . . . 14 W. R., 4

279. ———— Notice to tenant as raiyat.—Act X of 1859, s. 17.—Said for enhancement as against him as under-tenant.—By serving a notice on defendant under the terms of s. 17, Act X of 1859, plaintiff was held to have treated defendant as a raiyat having a right of occupancy, and to be debarred from suing him for enhancement of rent as an under-tenant or middleman. CHUNDERKATE GHOSH v. [24 W. R., 18]

264. ———— Irregularity in drawing up notice.—Right to declaratory decrees to enhance on service of fresh notice.—A slight irregularity in the drawing up of a notice of enhancement cannot affect the plaintiff's right to a declaratory order reciting his right to enhance at some future time on service of a fresh notice. RAM LOCHUN DUTT v. PRITUMBER PAUL . . . W. R., 1864, Act X, 111

265. ———— Notice given during pendency of suit.—Right to decrees declaratory of right to enhance.—Where a notice of enhancement is served during the pendency of a suit in which the only decree which can be passed is one simply declaratory of the plaintiff's right to recover rent at an enhanced rate, and fixing the rate to which the rent is to be enhanced, the notice is inoperative, and will not enable the Court to give a decree in that suit for the payment of a sum by way of rent from the year subsequent to the service of the notice. ROMABATH DUTT v. JOY KISHEN MOOKERJEE . . . 6 W. R., Act X, 90

266. ———— Notice of enhancement as distinct from requisition to tenant to come to terms.—Notice to pay current rate of rent.—Where a zamindar, after obtaining a decree declaring certain land to be invalid lakhiraj appertaining to his zamindari, serves a notice upon the occupier to pay rent at the rate current in the neighbourhood, such notice does not make the claim one for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate, but is simply a requisition to come to terms. DEEN DYAL PANAMANICK v. SUTTISH CHUNDER ROY . . . 15 W. R., 272

267. ———— Joint application for issue of notice of enhancement.—Collection of rent jointly made.—Where collection is jointly made by the lumberdars, they both ought to join in the application for issue of notice of enhancement. RAM PERKAD v. MAHOMED HASHIM . . . 2 Agra, 246

If it cannot be so personally served, it must be affixed at his usual place of residence in the district in which the land is situated; or if he have no such place of residence, at the mal cutcherry, etc. CHUNDER MONER DOSSEE v. DEURONERDUR LAROOKY . . . 7 W. R., 2

270. ———— Service of notice on wrong parties.—A suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rates cannot be maintained where the notice of enhancement has been served on parties other than the one known to the zamindar as the actual tenant from whom he had received rents, and to whom he had given receipts, even though the parties served with the notice are the representatives of the registered tenant. HURO MOHUN MOOKERJEE v. GOLUCK CHUNDER SIKAR . . . 12 W. R., 265

271. ———— Registered and unregistered tenants.—When a zamindar has received rent for twenty-two years from the tenant in possession, notwithstanding that he is not registered in his sherista, it is upon such recognized tenant, and not upon any other party, that his notice of enhancement must be served. NOMO COOMAR GHOSH v. [1 C. L. R., 418]

296. ——— Mode of service—Substituted service—Avoiding service of notice.—Where substituted service of notice of enhancement is resorted to under Regulation V of 1812, s. 10, the Courts should take care to be first satisfied that the person who ought to be served personally is keeping out of the way. RANCHUNDER DUTT v. JOGESHCHUNDER DUTT, 12 B. L. R., P. C., 229; 19 W. R., 353

of land. SUKHI MANI HOLDAR v. GUNGA GOBIND MUNDLA W. R., 1864, Act X, 126

319. ——— Grounds in case of intermediate tenures—Deduction.—A deduction of 15 per cent. from the present rent is a fair and equitable mode of assessing the rent payable by an intermediate tenant in a suit for enhancement. Intermediate tenures should be assessed at a rate so as to allow the tenant a reasonable profit, and not at a rate at which actual cultivators are assessed. DWANAMAYI v. GAURI PRASAD DASS 3 B. L. R., A. C., 270

320. ——— Unforeseen catastrophe—Inundation.—The occurrence of a catastrophe such as an inundation, during the year succeeding a notice of enhancement, was held to be sufficient to render the demand of a higher rent unfair and inequitable. BANASOONDEREN DOSSEE v. (b) RATE OF RENT LOWER THAN IN ADJACENT PLACES.

321. ——— Principle of adjustment of rent—Act X of 1859, s. 17.—Where enhancement of rent is sought on the ground "that the rate of rent payable by such raiyat is below the prevailing rate payable by the same class of raiyats for land of a similar description and with similar advantages in the places adjacent," the question of enhancement is to be determined by reference to such state of affairs as is provided for by Act X of 1859, s. 17, and cannot be decided merely on the ground that, although the value of the land has increased, there has also been an increase in the rate of wages and in the price of provisions consumed by the raiyats. SAVI v. [Marsh., 379: 2 Hay, 427

323. ——— Act X of 1859, s. 17.—In enhancing rents on the first of the grounds specified in s. 17, Act X of 1859, not only must the amount of rent paid by neighbouring raiyats be considered, but also the class of the raiyats, and whether the lands in question are similar to the lands held by the neighbouring raiyats and enjoying similar advantages. SHIB NARAIN DEVI v. NUND COOM v. R. CHITTORAM

325. ——— Necessity to enquire into whole of clause as to rate of rent.—With reference to the first ground specified in s. 17, Act X of 1859, it is not sufficient to find that the enhanced rent claimed is the same as that in an adjoining village, but it is also necessary to enquire whether that rent is paid by the same class of raiyats, or whether the land is of a similar description, or whether it possesses similar advantages. NOBO-COOMAR BISWAS v. OMAN 7 W. R., 148

326. ——— Claim to be rated at the "nerikh"—Rate paid by same class of raiyats for similar land.—In a suit for a kabuliast at an enhanced rate, a claim to the nerikh may be considered to be a claim to the pergunnah rate, i.e., the rate paid by the same class of raiyats for similar land in the neighbourhood. OMRIT LALL BOSE v. ABBACH CAZI 4 W. R., Act X, 47

327. ——— Rates of pergunnah—Rates of places adjacent.—Under cl. 1, s. 17, Act X of 1859, the enhancement of rent is not restricted to the rates of the pergunnah or of the village, but is to be according to the rates prevailing in the places adjacent. SUDUROODDEEN v. BHUTOO PULES

[W. R., 1864, Act X, 118

329. ——— Act X of 1859, s. 17.—Where a raiyat, who had taken a clearing lease for certain jungles at a ruwaddee jumma rising by degrees to 10 annas, which had been reached and had been paid for some time, was sued for enhancement of rent, it was held that the mere fact of the raiyat's produce having largely increased in value, and of his rent being materially below that paid for similar lands in the neighbourhood, were not sufficient grounds for enhancement of rent under s. 17, Act X of 1859. It is essential to a right to enhance, under cl. 1, s. 17, that the higher rates in the neighbourhood should be paid by the same class of raiyats, and by raiyats with similar advantages. PURMANEND SEIN v. [1 Agra, Rev., 64]

332. — "Places adjacent," Meaning of—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 17 and 18—Rate of rent.—The words "places adjacent" in Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 18, cl. 1. cannot be restricted to lands in contact with that to which the rent suit relates. The general rule may be stated to be that the plaintiff is not, on the one hand, restricted to a comparison with lands immediately contiguous, and must not, on the other, pick and choose particular places, but should consider the rates prevailing in all the neighbouring places which are similarly circumstanced. The enhancement need not be to some rate which is actually paid. Where different raiyats holding similar lands with similar advantages in places adjacent pay at different but higher rates for lands of the same description and quality, and the only question is the extent to which the defendant is liable to enhancement, the clause must not be so construed as to deprive a zamindar of his fair rents; but the Court should be guided by a consideration of what is fair and equitable, as provided by s. 5, subject to the limitations prescribed in s. 17. If a generally prevailing rate cannot be found, the currency of the different rates being so nearly equal as to make it impossible to say which is the prevailing rate, the Court is not in error in taking an average. DEVA GAZEE v. 349. ———— Sufficiency of evidence to prove prevailing rate.—In a suit after notice for a kabuliast at enhanced rates, said to be those prevailing in the adjacent villages for similar lands held by the same class of raiyats as defendant, the evidence of seven occupant raiyats of the neighbourhood, though not a majority, was held to be legally sufficient to make a case which defendant was bound to rebut. SARROOP MANNA v. 351. ———— Act X of 1859, ss. 13, 17.—Raiyat without right of occupancy.—Occupancy raiyats at lower rates.—In a suit for enhancement of rent after notice under s. 13, Act X of 1859 (such notice not treating the defendant as a raiyat having a right of occupancy), if the defendant claims to be protected from enhancement otherwise than under s. 17, it is for him to prove, or at least to allege, that he has a right of occupancy, before an issue can be received under the section last mentioned. If a defendant in such a suit has no right of occupancy, and the Judge considers the rate claimed represents the fair value of the land, he should give the plaintiff a decree, notwithstanding a very large number of ancient raiyats having right of occupancy at lower rates. DUFF v. DOWDAOL & SANOO JOTEPAR

352. ———— Proof of rate of rent.—Mistake as to area of land.—A suit for enhancement of rent after notice should not be dismissed merely because the landlord has made a mistake as to the exact area of the lands which his tenants hold. Where enhancement is sued for on the ground that the rent paid by the defendant is below the rate prevailing in the neighbourhood, it is not enough for the plaintiff to show that the adjacent lands are of a similar description to those held by defendant; he must also show that they are held by persons of the same class with the defendant. WOOMANATE ROY CHOWDERY v. [12 W. R., 476]

353. ———— Evidence by hypothetical adjustment of rents.—In a suit for enhanced rent where the ground relied on is the prevailing rate paid by adjacent occupiers of similar land, such ground cannot be established by the probability or even the certainty that, if the rents of the neighbouring occupants were re-adjusted, they would come up to the rate claimed. BRINDABUN DAI v. below the prevailing rate for land of similar description and with similar advantages in the places adjacent, and the plaintiff failed to prove the existence of any such ground, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree at the rates which the defendant's lands would bear, as Act X of 1859 does not authorize enhancement of the rent of a raiyat to the rates which the lands will bear. *JAIN ALI v. 855. ————— Data for calculation of.—In a suit for enhancement of the rent paid by shikwi talukhdars, the plaintiff is bound to afford data (e.g., the rate paid by intermediate tenants of the same class) upon which the Court can come to a satisfactory conclusion as to what would be a fair and equitable rate to be paid by defendant, plaintiff being competent, under s. 10, Act VI of 1862, to measure the talukh and ascertain the assets. *DABEE DOSS NEGEE CHOWDREY v. ascertained, the enhanced rent is to be arrived at by considering what part of such increased value ought to be apportioned to the tenant as the produce of his capital and labour, and what part of it is rent, that is, as it has been defined, "that portion of the value of the whole produce which remains to the owner of the land after all the outgoings belonging to the cultivation of whatever kind have been paid, including the profits of the capital employed, estimated according to the usual and ordinary rate of agricultural capital at the time being." Rent cannot be enhanced beyond the rate demanded in the plaint, and it can be enhanced only in respect of such part of the land as has increased in value. HILLS v. ISHORE GHOSH

[W. R., F. R., 48; 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 25]

359. ————— Wages of raiyats—Fair and equitable rent—Loss for crops destroyed.—The produce of a bigha of dhan in 1267 and 1268 should not be valued at the prices of 1269. Whether a raiyat borrows his food or not, he cannot receive his wages out of the proceeds of crops before the crops are gathered. An allowance for a house cannot be made to a raiyat in addition to a fair allowance for wages. Loss on account of crops destroyed or injured cannot be taken into consideration twice over: (1st) in ascertaining the average of the quantities and prices, and (2nd) in making an allowance for risks based upon injuries done to the crops, of which the quantities and prices must have been taken into consideration in calculating the average. A landlord cannot be charged with a rate of interest or profit on capital far beyond the ordinary rate of interest or profit, and also with an allowance for ensuring the return of the capital with such extraordinary rate of interest. One rate of rent cannot be fixed for a raiyat who spends his own capital, and another for a raiyat who is compelled to borrow it. The rate of rent which the landlord has a right by law to demand does not depend upon the size of the holding or the circumstances of the raiyat. What is a fair and equitable rent for one raiyat for lands of a similar description and with similar advantages in the same neighbourhood must also be fair and equitable for another, so far as the landlord is concerned. A raiyat who, but for the Permanent Settlement, would have been entitled to no more than half of the gross proceeds of his land, is not over-assured when he is allowed to retain at least five-sixths of the gross proceeds for his labour and profit on capital, and called upon to pay something less than the other one-sixth as rent to the zamindar. HILLS v. ISHORE GHOSH

[W. R., F. R., 131]

Held in the same case on review.—The condition and rights of raiyats, whose tenures have commenced since the Permanent Settlement, depend not on statute, but on contract and on laws and regulations specially enacted. In 1793 the zamindars were declared to be the proprietors of the lands. From 1793 to 1812 they were prevented from granting pottahs or leases to raiyats for more than ten years, and could not, therefore, have created raiyats with hereditary rights of property in the soil. After Regulation V of 1812 they could grant leases at any rate and for any term. By the retrospective effect of s. 2, Regulation VIII of 1819, leases in perpetuity or for terms granted prior to 1812 were rendered valid. In this case it was admitted that the value of the produce had increased otherwise than by the agency or at the expense of the raiyat, and that the notice required by s. 18, Act X of 1859, had been served before the end of Chaitro in the year preceding that for which enhancement was claimed. Upon being served with that notice, the defendant had a right to quit according to s. 19. The Statute of Limitation does not give him a right of occupancy under s. 6 by holding for twelve years. But for Act X of 1859, therefore, the defendant (assuming that he was not holding for a fixed term, and that his tenancy commenced since the Permanent Settlement) would have been liable to have his tenancy determined, and to be turned out of possession at the end of 1267, if he and his landlord could not agree as to the rent to be paid for the future. But it being admitted that he had a right of occupancy under Act X of 1859, he was entitled to hold at a fair and equitable rate. What is fair and equitable depends on the value of the produce and cost of production. After the Permanent Settlement, and before Act X of 1859, a right of occupancy was not acquired by a raiyat merely by holding or cultivating land for a period of twelve years. When that Act created the right, s. 5 declared that raiyats having rights of occupancy should be entitled to hold at fair and equitable rates, thus leaving it to the Court to determine in every case of dispute what is a fair and equitable rate. To be fair and equitable, it must be so as regards both parties. ISHORE GHOSH v. HILLS

360. — Act X of 1859,

ss. 5, 6, and 18—Adjustment, Mode of—Proportion, Rule of.—When there has been an increase in the value of the produce of land arising from an increase in price, and the ramiindar is entitled to a new kabuliast from an occupancy raiyat, at an enhanced rate, at fair and equitable rates. — Held per TAYLOR, J. (concurrent in by the majority of the Court)—The words "fair and equitable" in s. 5, Act X of 1859, are to be construed as equivalent to the varying expressions "pergunnah rates," "rates paid for similar lands in the adjacent places," and "rates fixed by the law and usage of the country,"—all which expressions indicate that portion of the gross produce calculated in money to which the ramiindar is entitled under the custom of the country; that as the Legislature directs that, in cases of dispute, the existing rent shall be considered fair and equitable until the contrary be shown, that rent is to be presumed, in all cases in which the presumption is not by the nature and express terms of the written contract rebutted, to be the customary rate included in the terms "pergunnah rates," "rates payable for similar lands in the places adjacent," and "rates fixed by the law of the country;" that in all cases in which the above presumption arises, and in which an adjustment of rent is requisite in consequence of a rise in the value of the produce caused simply by a rise in price, this method of proportion should be adopted—the former rent should bear to the enhanced rent the same proportion as the former value of the produce of the soil calculated on an average of three or five years next, before the date of the alleged rise in value, bears to its present value; that in all cases in which the above presumption is rebutted by the nature and express terms of the written contract, the re-adjustment should be formed on exactly the same principle as that on which the original written contract, which is sought to be superseded, was based; and that in cases in which it appears, from the express terms of the contract, that the rents then made payable by the tenant were below the ordinary rate paid for similar land in the places adjacent, in consequence of a covenant entered into by the raiyat to cultivate indigo or other crops, the former rent must be corrected so as to represent the ordinary rate current at the period of the contract, before it can be admitted to form a term in the calculation to be made according to the method of proportion above laid down. Per MACPHERSON, J.—The rule of proportion,—as the old value of produce is to the old rent, so is the present value of produce to the rent which ought now to be paid,—is the rule which should be adopted in the absence of any recently-adjusted pergunnah customary rates. Either party should be at liberty, in each case, to prove any special circumstances tending to show that the application of the rule of proportion to that particular case would work injustice. Per PHILLIPS, J.—When the Collector is called upon in any given case to determine the rent which it is fair and equitable that the raiyat should pay, he ought to enquire: 1st Whether at the last antecedent period, when the arrangement between the parties (either then created or previously existing) was such as must, by reason of tacit acquiescence or otherwise, be taken to have been fair and equitable, that arrangement contained express stipulations as to rent; if so, then those stipulations, unless the reason for them is gone, should be followed in arriving at the rent for the new pottah. 2nd—If the Collector finds no express agreement to guide him, then he must ascertain whether the raiyat is legally entitled by custom, based either on his personal status or on the character of the land occupied by him, to any definite share of the produce of the land or to any beneficial interest in it. If the raiyat is so entitled, the rent must be adjusted accordingly. 3rd—If neither express agreement nor legal right in the raiyat be found to have determined the amount of rent, the last arrangement must have been governed by some locally prevailing custom, or the rent regulated, tacitly, according to some locally prevailing rates; and in that case the custom ought to be complied with, and the rates adhered to. The fair presumption will be, in the absence of evidence or unless a different foundation be actually shown, that the rate was originally based upon the principle of sharing the produce of the land between the raiyat and zamindar in a fixed ratio. The result of applying this presumption would be that the new fair and equitable rent would be the same proportionate part of the new produce that the old rent was of the old produce. In all cases, the duration of the intended pottah must be taken into consideration as an element affecting the question of fairness and equity. Per NORMAN, J.—(1) With respect to the rents of raiyats having mere rights of occupancy, a zamindar is entitled to claim from his raiyats such rents as are paid by the same class of raiyats for land of a similar description and with similar advantages in places adjacent. (2) If such rents are too low, and the zamindar simply allege that the value of the produce has become increased, otherwise than by the agency, or at the expense, of the raiyat, he shows an increase in the value of that which primarily belongs to the producer, to a proportion of which alone the zamindar is entitled. It is only necessary to give the zamindar an amount of rent which shall bear the same proportion to the old rent which the present price of the produce does to the former. It must be taken that the old rent was fair and equitable. It is for the zamindar to prove his case, and he must carry back his evidence, as nearly as he can, to the time when the rent was fixed. (3) If the rent consists partly of money and partly of services, or something equivalent to services, as an obligation to cultivate and supply indigo at a certain price, the value of such contract would have to be estimated and added to the old rent; and in such cases the aggregate value would form a term in the proportion. (4) If a raiyat is holding below the rates paid by his neighbours, and in consequence of the increase of the value of the produce these rates are themselves too low, the zamindar may be entitled to the benefit of both grounds of enhancement in the same suit. (5) The cost of cultivation, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, may be taken roughly to have increased in a ratio proportionate to that of the increased price of produce. But in exceptional cases it may be found that the particular crop for which the land is specially fitted, as cotton, or crops on land in the vicinity of a town, has greatly increased in value without any general equivalent rise in the price of labour or the cost of food. In such cases, if the zamindar is not in a position to make out a case under the first clause, the increased profit may be divided between the zamindar and the tenant, as may appear reasonable under the special circumstances of the case; and in like manner any extraordinary increase in the cost of production may be proved by the raiyat in answer to the claim for enhancement on the ground of the enhanced price of produce. (6) If the productive powers have increased from other causes, as in the case of lands protected from flooding by the embankments of the railway, without increase of outlay or labour by the tenant, the whole of such increase belongs to the zamindar, subject to any increased expenses which may be caused to the tenant by the collection or realization of the larger profit. Per PRACOCK, C.J. (dissenting)—The rule of proportion is not applicable. The rule laid down in Ishore Ghose v. Hills, W. R., F. R., 131, 145, should be followed. The definition of "rent" by Malthus in his "Principles of Political Economy" is the guide. Rent is "that portion of the value of the whole produce which remains to the owner of the land after all the outgoings belonging to its cultivation of whatever kind have been paid, including the profits of the capital employed, estimated according to the usual and ordinary rate of agricultural capital at the time being." In considering whether the whole of the increased value of the produce is to be added to the rent, the Court must be guided by all the circumstances of the case. It may take the old rent as a fair and equitable rent with reference to the former value of the produce. It must take into consideration the circumstances under which the value of the produce has increased, and whether these circumstances are likely to continue. It must also consider whether the costs of production, including fair and reasonable wages for labour, and the ordinary rate of profits derived from agriculture in the neighbourhood, have increased; and if so, it must make a fair allowance on that account. It is only the net increase, or such part of the net increase as will render the rent fair and equitable, that can be added to it. THAKOORANKEE DOSSEE v. BISHESHWER MOOKERJEE

In such a case, where the value of similar lands in the same locality, but not sharing the especial advantages resulting from works or improvements erected or effected, by or at the expense of the defendant or his ancestor, has been increased by natural causes, it must be assumed that the lands of the defendant owe their increased value to that extent to natural causes, and are to that extent liable to enhancement. TEKAIT CHOORAMUN SINGH v. A subsequent suit, in which rent was claimed at R3,200, was finally decided in 1862, the compromise being thereby set aside and the liability of the talukh to enhancement finally established. The ameen's report, which fixed the rent payable at R8,124, was not, however, made until 1869. In a suit to recover rent at R8,124 for the year 1871-72, the Subordinate Judge gave a decree for R5,062-15-8, a re-measurement of the talukh having shown a decrease in the amount of culturable land. Held, reversing the decision of the High Court, that the Subordinate Judge was right in making such a decree. SRAT SOONDARI DEBYA v. 1. ——— Assignment of mortgage-bond.—A pledged certain lands to B in 1865, and on the 24th of July 1868 granted a mokurrari lease of the same lands to C. On the 5th of June 1868, shortly before the granting of the mokurrari lease, A executed a simple mortgage of 8 annas of the same lands to D. It was proved that the consideration-money given by C for the lease had been expended in paying off B's mortgage, and that the bond had been made over to C, though not formally assigned to him. Held that, under these circumstances, C was entitled to stand in the place of the first mortgagee; and that he was to be considered as having taken a regular assignment of the bond. DULI CHAND v. 2. ——— Assignment of decree—Claim of attaching creditor—Assignee's incomplete equitable title.—A brought a suit against B, which was dismissed with costs. A subsequently brought a suit against C, in which he obtained an ex-parte decree and assigned his interest under the decree to D and E. D and E neglected to have their names substituted for that of A on the record. C applied for and obtained an order setting aside the ex-parte decree, and allowing him to come in and defend the suit on deposit in Court of the sum sued for. "At the re-hearing the suit was again determined in favour of A. B the reupon, in execution of his decree for costs, attached the moneys in the hands of the Court in the suit of A against C. D and E obtained an ad-interim injunction restraining B from meddling with the money, and put in their claim under the assignment. Held that the incomplete equitable title of D and E could not prevail against the right of B, the attaching creditor." GRISH CHUNDER SEIN v. 3. ——— Assignment by power-of-attorney to solicitor to receive moneys—Attachment of fund in Court—Liability to refund money paid out of Court.—S, a creditor of the estate of a deceased person which was being administered by the Court, gave a power-of-attorney to his solicitors to receive all moneys coming to him under the decree, and by a letter authorized them, after satisfying their own claims out of the money to be received, to pay the balance to the plaintiff. The solicitors, in the presence of the plaintiff, agreed to draw the money and pay the plaintiff. The fund in Court to the credit of S, having been ascertained, was afterwards attached by the defendants, judgment-creditors of S, and paid out of Court to the defendants. Held that S had made a valid equitable assignment to the plaintiff, and that the defendants were bound to refund to the plaintiff the moneys paid out of Court to them. SHAJR MULL v. SINGHABAI MUJALI

4. ——— Assignment by power-of-attorney—Firm—Partnership—Contract made by one member of firm binding on firm.—The firm of S & Co., the partners of which were W S and F E, took a contract from Government on 12th November 1877 to construct a barrel-house at the Gunpowder Manufactory at Kirkee, and on the 28th November 1877 the plaintiff agreed to advance moneys "up to Rs15,000" for the purpose of enabling the firm to carry out the contract. Under the agreement, the plaintiff was to receive all sums to become due from the Government on the contractors' bills and to pay the balance to the firm after repaying himself all advances with interest. On the same day the firm executed a power-of-attorney to the plaintiff, authorizing him to receive from the Government Engineer all such sums to become due to the firm under the contract, which power-of-attorney was deposited by plaintiff in the office of the Executive Engineer at Poona. In March or April 1878 W S left for England, up to which time Rs34,900 had been advanced by the plaintiff, and a balance of Rs14,942-5-10 still remained due to him after giving credit for the sums received on the bills passed by the Executive Engineer. On 24th July 1878 the plaintiff entered into a fresh agreement with F E, similar to the former one, to make further advances to the firm up to Rs16,000 in addition to Rs15,000 on the same terms as those mentioned in the previous agreement, and by means of these advances the contract was completed at the end of 1879. In 1878 the defendant obtained a decree against W S, and attached the right, title, and interest of W S in a sum of Rs5,034-11-9 in the hands of the Executive Engineer, which was then due to the firm on the contract. The plaintiff, who alleged that Rs13,700-1-11 were due to him from the firm, applied to have the attachment removed, which application was refused on 30th September 1879, and the sum attached was paid to the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover from him Rs5,034-11-9. Held that the first agreement of 28th November 1877, coupled with the execution of the power-of-attorney to him of the same date, amounted to an assignment to the plaintiff of the sums to become due to S & Co. on the bills passed by the Executive Engineer. Held also that the second agreement, although made by one member only of the firm of S & Co. with the plaintiff, was under the circumstances both necessary to the carrying out of the partnership business and in accordance with the ordinary practice of such partnerships as that of S & Co., and was therefore binding on the firm, and that the two agreements, accompanied by the power-of-attorney, operated as an assignment of all the moneys to become due on the contractors' bills as a security for the plaintiff's advances with interest, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover the sum claimed from the defendant. *JAGABHAI LALLUBHAI v. 2. — Agreement creating charge on proceeds of an intended appeal.—Property substituted by agreement between decree-holder and third parties for such proceeds—Right to follow such proceeds in hands of such third parties—Notice.—A judgment-debtor paid into Court the sum due under a decree passed against him on appeal. The expenses of the appeal had been advanced by the present plaintiff under an agreement signed by the appellants, which provided as follows:—"You should first take out of the amount which may be collected from the defendants the whole of the amount incurred on account of the said costs." Persons holding a decree against the successful appellants sought to enforce it against the money in Court, having notice of the above agreement. Their application was first resisted by the successful appellants on the ground that the money was charity property, but subsequently it was consented to, and the money was paid out to them on their substituting certain other property for the purposes of the charity. The present plaintiff, having obtained a decree on the above agreement, now sought to execute it against the money which had been so paid out. Held that the above agreement constituted a valid charge on the funds realized under the appellate decree, which charge was binding on the payees of the money, and the plaintiff was not bound to proceed against the property substituted by them for the purposes of the charity. *PALANIAPPA v. 3. — Equitable charge on property purchased.—A charge created in favour of the lender of the purchase-money.—By the acts of the parties and their relations to one another, money borrowed by an agent for a principal for the purchase of property was rendered a charge upon the latter in the principal's hands, he being the real purchaser. The lender of money, which he advanced to the nominal purchaser of property, who was the agent of the real purchaser, made the advance with the knowledge that it was for the principal's purpose, the latter only using the agent's name in the purchase. The nominal purchaser then executed a deed purporting to hypothecate the property as security for the loan. The lender, not having been paid, obtained a money decree against the nominal purchaser, and, bringing the property to a Court-male, bought it himself. He could not, however, obtain entry of his name in the Collectorate books, on the opposition of the real purchaser, and a suit brought by him for a declaration of his title and his right to possession against the nominal purchaser was dismissed. Afterwards in the present suit, which the lender brought against both the real and the nominal purchasers, it was held that, although in regard to the previous judgment it might be difficult to decide that the deed itself constituted a valid hypothecation, the facts of the case were sufficient to show that the lender of the money was entitled to a declaration that the advance of money for the purchase formed an equitable charge upon the property against the real purchaser. *BHAGWATI PRASAD v. 2. — Custody of Sheriff—Relaxation of imprisonment—Custody in private house.

—If a Sheriff, upon the representation of a debtor's ill-health, takes upon himself of his own authority to relax the debtor's imprisonment, by letting him reside out of jail, it is an escape for which the Sheriff is liable to an action for damages. If the judgment-creditor voluntarily discharges the debtor out of custody, even for a week only, he cannot, by any agreement which he might have made with the debtor, afterwards retake him, although the debtor may have agreed that, if he does not pay the money within a week, he shall be retaken. A debtor removed from prison under a rule of Court, whether with or without the consent of his creditor, and kept in charge of a Sheriff's officer in a private house, is still in the custody of the Sheriff. The Sheriff may, without a rule of Court, refuse to allow the debtor to reside out of prison, though the creditor may have consented to it. When the Sheriff and all parties consent to the debtor being kept in custody in a private house, the Sheriff is liable to an action for escape on proof of want of proper care and surveillance; but it would be a matter of fact for a jury to consider whether the creditor, being in some measure instrumental to the escape, ought to recover against the Sheriff.

18. ———— Escape from confinement negligently suffered by public servant—Escape from confinement intentionally suffered by public servant—Penal Code, ss. 222, 223—Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 61, 167.—While a case was being investigated by A, a police officer, under the provisions of Ch. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, T presented a petition to the Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the case, in which he accused W of being concerned in the commission of the offence, and prayed that he might be arrested and sent to the police officer investigating the case. W was accordingly arrested and brought before the Magistrate, who, having examined T on oath and taken W's statement, made an order on the petition to the following effect: "As no police report has been made in this matter, and the petitioner only has presented this petition, ordered that these papers of W be sent to the District Superintendent of Police, and if a report of this matter be made, the case may be sent up according to rule with the papers." In accordance with this order, W was taken to the District Superintendent of Police, and was sent by that officer to A. Held that the Magistrate's order might be taken to have been passed under s. 167 of the Code, and therefore W was lawfully committed to the custody of the police, and A was bound to detain him in such custody until released therefrom by due course of law; and that consequently A, having negligently suffered W to escape, had been properly convicted under s. 223 of the Penal Code. EMPERESS v. ASHRAF ALI

19. ———— Irregular endorsement of warrant—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 224—Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, s. 79.—An endorsement on a warrant of arrest under s. 79 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be regularly made by name to a certain person in order to authorize him to make the arrest. Where an endorsement was made to the officer of a certain police station without the name of such officer being given,—Held that the arrest under the warrant was not legal so as to make any escape an offence under s. 224 of the Penal Code. *DURGAT TEWARI v. 20. ———— Obstructing public servant in his duty—Penal Code, ss. 186, 224.—Escaping from lawful custody is not obstructing a public servant in the execution of his duty within the meaning of s. 186 of the Penal Code. RAO v. POSHUBIN DHAMBASI PATIL

22. ———— Rescue from lawful custody—Penal Code, s. 225.—Before a conviction can be had under s. 225, Penal Code, it must be proved that the person whom the accused are charged with having rescued was in lawful custody at the time. QUEEN v. DEGUMBER AHIR 21 W. R., Cr., 22

23. ———— Penal Code, s. 225.—Where a police officer, duly appointed under Act V of 1861, was engaged in the discharge of his duty as such police officer at a time when an unlawful assembly took place, it was held that he was competent to apprehend any of the members of such unlawful assembly; and a person who rescued the party apprehended was convicted of rescuing from lawful custody within the meaning of s. 225 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN v. [13 W. R., Cr., 75]

24. ———— Penal Code, s. 225—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 53—Arrest of thief—Rescue from custody of private person.—To support a conviction under s. 225 of the Indian Penal Code, it is not necessary that the custody from which the offender is rescued should be that of a policeman: it is enough that the custody is one which is authorized by law. Held, therefore, that rescue from the custody of a private person who had arrested a thief in the act of stealing was an offence. *QUEEN-EMPERESS v. Code (Act V of 1898), s. 59—Village Chowkidari Amendment Act, 1870 (Bengal Act I of 1892), s. 13.—S, who was alleged to have committed theft, was unlawfully arrested by a private person and made over to the custody of the village-chowkidar. The theft was not committed in view of such private person. S was rescued from the custody of the village-chowkidar by the accused. The accused were convicted under s. 225 of the Penal Code, and sentenced each to two months' rigorous imprisonment. Held that a village chowkidar cannot be properly regarded as a police-officer within the terms of s. 59 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that S, therefore, was not in lawful custody at the time of his rescue. Conviction and sentence set aside. KALAI v. KALU CHOWKIDAR. I. L. R., 27 Cal., 366

26. ———— Escape where detention is not for an offence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 224.—An offence was committed in 1886. In 1893 a person of the same name as the offender was arrested, tried, and acquitted. Whilst under arrest, the accused escaped from custody. Held that he was not liable to conviction under s. 224 of the Penal Code. An escape from custody when such detention is not for an offence is not punishable under that section. GANGA CHARAN SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPERESS

When revenue was imposed on the mehal, no interference with the rights of the holder of the garden took place. Revenue engagements were not taken from him, and he remained, as before, a proprietor, although not a proprietor who engaged for the revenue of the mehal. It was held that the garden did not escheat to the zamindars of the mehal on the death of the holder without heirs. CHIRAGHAN v. HARBANS

1. STATEMENTS AND PLEADINGS.

1. ———— Proof of estoppel.—Estoppels must be made out clearly. *TWEDIE v. POONCHUN-
DER GANGOOLY* . . . 8 W. R., 125

2. ———— Statement in former suit—
Estoppel in pais—Pleadings—Decision on pleadings.—An estoppel in pais need not be pleaded in order to make it obligatory. With the Indian system of pleading, a party's statement in a judicial proceeding cannot be excluded like allegations in bills in equity and pleadings at common law. But mere statements for the purpose of a particular judicial proceeding can only be conclusive evidence in another proceeding as to such material facts embodied therein as must have been found affirmatively to warrant the judgment of the Court upon the issues joined.
They are then conclusive between the same parties, not because they are the statements of those parties, but because, for all purposes of present and prospective litigation, they must be taken as truth. A brought a pauper suit, and virtually denied possession of certain property. B petitioned to dispauper A, alleging that A was possessed of such property.
The Court decided that A was in possession, and rejected her prayer to be allowed to sue as a pauper.
Held in a subsequent suit by A's representative against B's representative for the property that, even if A's allegation, found to be false, could be treated as an estoppel, B's allegation, found to be true, would also be an estoppel; and "estoppel against estoppel setteth the matter at large;" but that, although A's allegation was receivable evidence against A and her representative, they were not concluded by such allegation and the decision thereon. *CIVA RAU NANAJI
v. JEVANA RAU* . . . 2 Mad., 31

him conclusively. It should be taken as an admission. *JUGUTENDUR BUNWARR v. DIN DYAL CHAT-

4. ———— Denial of genui-ness of mortgage—Subsequent suit to redeem.—
V sued to eject K from certain land, alleging that K, having entered under a lease, held as a trespasser.
K pleaded that he held as mortgagee. It was found that K obtained possession under a mortgage-deed for Rs. 1,000, which had not been registered, and that he held also a second mortgage for Rs. 50, and it was held on second appeal that K was entitled to defend his possession by virtue of the mortgage for Rs. 50, and as V had not offered to redeem the charge, but had sued on false averments, the suit was dismissed. V then sued K to recover the land on payment of Rs. 50. In his plaint V stated that, though the mortgage-deed for Rs. 50 was fabricated, the High Court had decided that he was bound to pay Rs. 50 before recovering the land from K. The District Court on appeal dismissed the suit on the ground, inter alia, that, as V denied the genuineness of the mortgage, he could not sue for redemption. Held that V was entitled to redeem. VARATHAYANAR v. KRISHNASAMI

[I. L. R., 10 Mad., 102]

5. ———— Admission not amounting to estoppel—Statement in suit for enhancement as to certain person being tenant.—

A patnidar obtained decrees for enhancement of rent on kabuliats signed by a widow for her minor son, by which she agreed to pay it. Held, while finding that the minor was liable for the enhanced rent, that the patnidar was not precluded by the fact that he had, after the son had attained full age, sued the mother as tenant, stating that she, and not the son, was tenant. WATSON & Co. v. SHAM LALL MITTER

[I. R., 14 I. A., 178]

6. ———— Plea in former suit—Contrary defences.—Held that the defendants, having in a previous suit set up the defence that K was disqualified by insanity and taken the decision of the Court on that ground, were estopped now from setting up the defence that he was not so disqualified, and that he was entitled to succeed. BALJHOKUN LAL AWASTHI v. MAHARAO DORAY

7. ———— The plaintiff sued the defendant for rent, basing his claim upon a kabuli bearing date 6th Srabun 1258 B.S. His suit was dismissed, and the kabuli pronounced to be spurious. Held that he was not estopped from afterwards suing the same defendant to set aside a pottah of the 27th Aughran 1244 B.S., under which the defendant claimed, the validity of the pottah not being in issue in the former suit. *OOMANATH ROY CHOWDHRY v. [5 W. R., Cr., 50]

8. ———— Admission by party in other cases—Case between different parties.—An admission made by a party in other cases may be taken as evidence against him, but cannot operate against him as an estoppel in a case in which his opponents are persons to whom the admission was not made, and who are not proved to have ever heard of it, or to have been misled by it, or to have acted in reliance upon it. CHANDERKANT CHUCKERBUTTY v. PEARIS MORUN DUTT

9. ———— Statement in former suit—Assertion as to nature of tenure of land.—Held that the plaintiff's assertion in a former suit claiming as "malikana" the land now in dispute, even if the identity of the land now claimed with the land then in suit be established (which had not been done), does not absolutely preclude him from asserting "mouza" right to the same land and the Court from adjudging his true right. *RAM SAHAI MISSE v. kabuliat and for determination of the rate at which such kabuliat is to be delivered, a pottah which he denied in a former suit for rent. MAHOMED HOSSEIN v. PIRROO MULLICK

. W. R., 1884, Act X, 115

11. ———— Objection to regular suit.—A having obtained an order for the reversal of certain execution proceedings instituted by B on the ground that they were barred by limitation, and carried on fraudulently without his knowledge, B had that order set aside on appeal, on the ground that there was no execution case before the Court in which such an order could be made. A then brought a regular suit to set aside the execution proceedings, when B objected that a regular suit would not lie under the provisions of a 11, Act XXIII of 1861. Held that B was estopped from taking that objection in the present suit. HUB PROSHAUD ROY v. ENAYET HOSSEIN

. 2 C. L. R., 471

12. ———— Admission—Receipt of money.—The plaintiffs, in their answer to a plaint by the defendants, admitted that they had received a certain sum on behalf of the defendants, and alleged that they had applied it in a particular way. The Judge discredited this statement, and made a decree not founded upon it. The plaintiffs thereupon sued for the sum the receipt of which they had so admitted. Held that such admission was evidence against them. BRUGHMUT NARAIN JHA v. LOLL JHA

[Marsh., 49: 1 Hay, 114]

[1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 104]

13. ———— Contradictory statements.—Held that the former statement of the plaintiff, which was at variance with the one now made, was not an estoppel, but the Court ought to have determined which of the two statements was correct. JOY NARAIN v. TORANUN

. 3 Agra, 216

14. ———— Pleading—Inconsistent claims.—Where a plaintiff deliberately claimed lands as rent-free, he was not allowed, merely on the ground of the proprietor admitting the lands to be leased to plaintiff's vendors, or even of the defendant making a somewhat similar admission, to benefit by such admissions and vary his claim. NIDHA CHOWDHRY v. BUNDA LALL TACOOB

. 6 W. R., 290

15. ———— Admission.—Because the decree in a former suit against the present plaintiff and the alleged holders of a separate half share awarded to another co-sharer who was the plaintiff in that case, owing to a mistake of that plaintiff, supported by the admission of the present plaintiff less than he was legally entitled to, the mistake need not be perpetuated, nor will his former admission estop the plaintiff in a subsequent suit. RAM SURORAN SINGH v. KASHER ROY

. 6 W. R., 176

16. ———— Survey award made without authority.—In a suit for certain immoveable property it was held that the plaintiffs were not bound by an Act IV award against a person in whose name the property had been purchased by the father of the plaintiffs, but who had not either title or interest in the property, and did not conduct the Act IV proceeding with any authority from the plaintiffs. Held, too, that plaintiffs were not estopped by statements made by them as parties in another suit, which did not affect their status, nor by their failure to set forth their title in a former suit brought against them for mesne profits of the land in dispute. MOHENDRA NATH MULLICK v. RAHAL DORA DIBCAR

[10 W. R., 344]

17. ——— Finding against statement.—The allegation of a plaintiff in a former suit, which was referred to arbitration, having been overruled by the arbitrators, and another state of things found by them to exist, he is not estopped by his former allegation from bringing a further suit founded on the finding of the arbitrators. RAM CHUNDER DEY v. KISSEN MOHUN SHAHA

[6 W. R., 68]

18. ——— Plaintiffs sued for their share in the property of their family. The Judge rejected their claim, mainly on the ground that, when parties in a former suit respecting the same property, they had pleaded division, and the Court found that the family was undivided. Held that the Judge was wrong in attributing to the plaintiff the plea of division in the former suit, and, even if such plea had been raised, the judgment in that suit, pronouncing the status of the family to be that of non-division, was conclusive on that subject, and that it was open to the plaintiffs to sue for enforcement of their rights to effect a division. SANGOOVIER v. KOLLATHOORAYEN

1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 116

WATSON v. POKHUR DOSS PAUL. MOHINEE DOSSAN v. POKHUR DOSS PAUL

4 W. R., 2

19. ——— Disclaimer of defendant.—The plaintiff sued for a quantity of land which was family property in the possession of his brother, the defendant. The defendant in a former suit declared that the land sued for was not family property, but belonged to his sister, and in this suit he claimed the property under her will. The lower Court found that the property was family property, but that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the whole property on the ground that the disclaimer of the defendant in the former suit amounted to an estoppel and forfeiture of his share. Held that the effect of the defendant's conduct did not operate either as an estoppel or a forfeiture, and that the plaintiff was only entitled to a decree for a moiety of the property. VELLAYAN CHETTI v. AIYAN alias THUNDAYAMURTY CHETTI

4 Mad., 374

20. ——— False statement in plaint.—A plaintiff is not estopped by an evidently false statement in his plaint as to possession, but the Court may look behind the statement and determine upon its truth or otherwise and affirm or disallow it, as may seem right and proper. CHOONES LALL v. KERAMUT ALI admission in a petition. KRISTO PANA DOSSAN v. PUNDO LOCHEN MAYER

6 W. R., 288

22. ——— Statement of dispossession in petition.—Suit subsequently brought alleging possession. A statement of dispossession made in a petition preferred under s. 269 of Act VIII of 1859 by a person claiming land sold in execution of a decree, and ordered to be put in possession of the auction-purchaser, cannot operate as an estoppel in a suit subsequently brought by the claimant to "establish her right" on the allegation of her being in possession of the land in question. KHANUM JAN v. RUTTON LAL

9 W. R., 95

23. ——— Statement by stranger to suit.—Transfer of interest of judgment-debtor.—Liability.—Where a person filed a petition in a suit stating that all the interests of the judgment-debtor had been transferred to him, and for several years thereafter opposed all attempts on the part of the decree-holder to issue execution,—Held that the person who had so come forward, and had so interfered in the suit, was liable as a defendant, and that execution could be issued against him. A stranger to a suit cannot (even with the decree-holder's consent) so deal with a judgment-debtor as to acquire an interest in the suit which will enable him to oppose and prevent the execution of the decree, without rendering himself liable to be put upon the record as a judgment-debtor. LALLA POOROHIT LALL v. SAGEERUS

7 W. R., 368

24. ——— Contradictory statements.—Admission.—In proceedings under Act XXVII of 1860 the plaintiff, a widow, called herself the guardian and trustee of her minor adopted son, but the certificate was granted to the defendant, who claimed under the husband's will. The plaintiff afterwards sued as her husband's widow, without an adopted son, to call in question the will set up by the defendant, the so-called adopted son supporting her action. Held that the plaintiff's former statement in the Act XXVII case was no bar to her present action. SOOMY MONI DOSSAN v. STROOF CHUNDER SHAH

[W. R., 1864, 196]

25. ——— Admission of father as to ancestral property.—How far binding on sons.—In the case of ancestral property the admission of a father may be used as evidence against his sons, but is not conclusive, and does not stop the sons from contending that such admission was collusive or erroneous. NOWBET RAM v. DEBBAREE SINGH

[2 Agra, 145]

26. ——— Plea in former suit.—Denial of will.—Held the plaintiffs were not estopped in a suit under a will for a legacy, by the denial of the will by the persons through whom they claimed. NANA NARAIN RAO v. RAMA NEND

2 Agra, 171

27. ——— Erroneous pleas.—Subsequent contradictory evidence.—In a suit for land the defendant pleaded that the land was his ancestral estate. He subsequently tendered evidence, then first obtained, to show that the land had in 1814 been mortgaged to, and in 1831 bought by, his father. Held that the evidence was receivable notwithstanding the erroneous plea. RANGASWAMI AYTANGAR v. KRISHNA AYTANGAR . . . 1 Mad., 78

28. — Admission by reversioner
—Suit by party to prevent sale of property in which he has an interest.—Held that a party was not estopped from bringing a suit to bar sale of a property in which he had a reversionary right by the fact that he had admitted on previous occasions that he had no present right in the property. SUNJ BAHAR v. 29. — Admission of predecessor in title.—Interest in property—Decree.—When the admission of his predecessor in title is set up against a party, it is open to him to show that the person whose admission is alleged to bind him had at the time no interest in the property (Evidence Act, s. 18), notwithstanding a decree under which the property was sold as the property of the admitting person and another co-debtor. BEFIN BEHARIE SIRCAR v. NIL-MONI SINGH DEO . . . 25 W. R., 125

30. — Admission of having transferred rights.—Failure of transferee to prove it.—A sold his right and interest under a decree to B. Subsequently A's right and title were sold in satisfaction of a decree against him and purchased by C. B sued C, but failed to establish his title, or right to set aside the sale to C. A appeared in that suit, and admitted having parted with his rights to B. Held that he could not be now allowed to resume them, merely because B had failed to prove his title against C. HURO PERSHAD ROY CHOWDERY v. RAM CHUNDER BABOO . . . 7 W. R., 300

31. — Admission in former suit.—Effect between different parties.—To a suit brought by certain mortgagees against the inamdars to enforce mortgage rights existing since 1842, the defence was made that possession taken of the inam lands by the Collector in 1845 had determined the original inam rights therein, as well as the lien of the mortgagees. The present zamindar, son and successor of the grantor of 1868, now sued claiming that he had determined the tenancy by a notice to quit. Held that the above did not operate as any estoppel as between the plaintiff and the inamdars, the zamindar not having been a party to the suit, but was only an admission, and not conclusive. MAHARAJA OF VIZIANAGRAM v. SUBYANARAYANA

32. — Difference between contention in Original Court and Appeal Court.—Quere.—Whether the plaintiff, having successfully contended before the Assistant Judge that his plaint was for a declaration of right merely without consequential relief, and therefore properly stamped, could be permitted to say in appeal that the house was the subject-matter of the suit within the meaning of a 1st of the Bombay Courts Act, XIV of 1860. NOTICHAUD JAICHAND v. DADABHAI PESTANJI

33. — Diverse contentions in pleading.—Account—Limitation.—A defendant, having by his written statement pleaded that, if a general partnership account were taken, he would be found not to be indebted to the plaintiff in respect of contribution claimed, cannot also plead the Limitation Act as a bar to the taking of such account. DAYAL JAIRAJ v. KHATAV LADHA . . . 13 Bom., 97

34. — It is not open to a defendant to change the whole nature of his defence at the last moment, and to set up in a Court of appeal a plea which he has directly and fraudulently repudiated in the Court below. In an ejectment suit, the defendants, from whom the plaintiff alleged that he had purchased the land from which he sought to eject them, and who had before suit by parol disclaimed the plaintiff's title, set up in their written statement an adverse title in themselves. The lower Court found the plaintiff's allegation to be true. Held that the defendants were estopped from contending on appeal that they were occupancy raiyats, and therefore not liable to be ejected; and that by their own conduct they had forfeited the rights which they claimed. SUTYABHAMA DASER v. 35. — False admission of ancestor.
—A false admission made by a serishtadar to avoid losing his appointment does not estop his heirs from afterwards setting up the truth. MAHOMED WAYEZ v. SUGERMOONISSA . . . 6 W. R., 36

36. — Fraudulent statement—Admission.—When, in answer to a suit, two parties combine to make a statement to defeat a third party, it is competent to either of those parties, when they are opposed to each other in a suit, to say that the combined statement was false, and intended as a fraud against the third party. The admission in the former suit is not to be regarded as an estoppel against either of the two parties in a subsequent suit, but the Court is competent to enquire into the character of the transaction and to declare it void, if it is satisfied that the transaction is not a bond fide one. RAM SABUN SINGH v. 37. — Statement in former suit to defeat claim.—Benami transaction to defeat creditors—Proof of true nature of transaction.—Where the lower Appellate Court did not allow a defendant in the present suit to deny the truth of admissions made by her in a former case, or to adduce evidence of her own falsehood and deceit, it was deemed to have acted in opposition to the ruling of the Privy Council in a case in which a statement previously put forward in a Court of Justice with a view to defeat the claim of the plaintiff was held to be no estoppel to the party's showing the real truth of the transaction. Even where the object of a benami transaction is to obtain a shield against a creditor, the parties are not precluded from showing

40. ———— Petition submitting account of income—Act IX of 1869, s. 19—False statement of income.—A petition submitting the schedule of his income, filed by a petitioner in the Income Tax Office, is admissible as evidence against the person submitting and subscribing it; but it is not conclusive, and a false statement made in it, though it may render the petitioner amenable to a prosecution under Act IX of 1869, s. 19, does not estop the person verifying the petition from proving that he made the statement to evade the income tax, and that the fact was otherwise than as stated. *GHARDHAR SINGH v. 2. DENIAL OF TITLE.

41. ———— Parol evidence to prove different title from that in lease—Suit for rent.—A executed a kabuliati for a term of years to B as zamindar. B gave a patni of the zamindari to C. C instituted a suit for arrears of rent under the lease for a term of years against A, the lessee.

42. ———— Evidence Act, s. 116—Landlord and tenant.—S. 116 of the Evidence Act does not debar one who has once been a tenant from contending that the title of his landlord has been lost or that his tenancy has determined. It precludes him only during the continuance of the tenancy from contending that his landlord had no title at the commencement of the tenancy. AMRU v. RAMAKRISHNA SASTRI 1 L. R., 2 Mad., 226

43. ———— Denial by tenant of his landlord's title—Ejectment, Suit for.—In a suit to eject a tenant holding over after the expiration of his lease, it is not competent to the tenant to set up that his landlord, the plaintiff, holds under an invalid lakhiraj tenure, and that the zamindar and not the plaintiff is entitled to the land. MOHESH CHUNDER BISWAS v. GOOROPERSAD BOSE
[Marsh., 377; 2 Hay, 473]

44. ———— Suit by landlord for possession—Ejectment, Suit for.—The plaintiff sued for possession of a certain house, alleging the expiry of the lease (kabuliati), on which the defendants held it as tenants. The mamlatdar dismissed the suit, being of opinion that the plaintiff had no title to the house when he granted the lease, and the house belonged to the defendants when they executed the lease. Held, reversing the decree, that the defendants (tenants), having executed the kabuliati, could not deny the plaintiff's title as a ground for refusing to give up possession, and the mamlatdar himself, therefore, could not go into the question. *Parbhudas v. 45. ———— Regular suit by tenant.—If the existence of a tenancy be established by the fact of the tenant's payment of rent to his landlord or otherwise, the tenant cannot ordinarily dispute the title of his landlord in a suit brought against him for recovery of possession. He must first give up possession, and then, if he has any title alimade, that title may be tried in a suit of ejectment against the landlord. VASUDRY DASI v. BABAJI RANU 8 Bom., A. C., 175

46. ———— Denial of title as holding under unregistered document—Admission of landlord's right.—Where a tenant has repeatedly acknowledged that a person in possession of the proprietary right was entitled to receive rent, and has in fact attorned to him, he cannot afterwards be allowed to question the validity of the title of such person on the ground that the instrument by virtue of which possession of the proprietary right had been obtained was unregistered. SHUMS AHMUD v. GOOLAM MOHSE-OD-DEN. . . 8 N. W., 153

47. — Denial by tenant of landlord's title—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 116—Derivative title.—A, a raiyat, being in possession of a certain holding, executed a kabuliat regarding this holding in favour of B (who claimed the land, in which the holding was included, under a derivative title from the last owner), and paid rent to B thereunder. Held that A was not estopped by s. 116 of the Evidence Act from disputing B's title. The words "at the beginning of the tenancy" in s. 116 of Act I of 1872 only apply to cases in which tenants are put into possession of the tenancy by the person to whom they have attorned, and not to cases in which the tenants have previously been in possession. LAL MAHOMED v. KALLANUS

48. — Denial of lessor's title—Co-sharers—Lease from one of several co-sharers.—A person taking a lease from one of several co-sharers cannot dispute his lessor's exclusive title to receive the rent or sue in ejectment. JAMESDJI SORABJI v. LAKSHNIRAM RAJARAM. I. L. R., 13 Bom., 323

49. — Unassessed waste reclaimed by plaintiff—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 116—Pottah granted to defendant.—The plaintiff, who was the holder of a warg in Canara, demised adjacent waste land to one who brought it into cultivation and remained in occupation for two years. The land was not assessed to revenue in the name of either of these persons. At the end of two years, the tenant let into occupation a sub-tenant who subsequently assigned his right to the defendant, the holder of a neighbouring warg. The defendant obtained a pottah for the land from the revenue authorities. In a suit by plaintiff to eject the defendant, Held that the defendant was not estopped from setting up a title adverse to the plaintiff, and that his possession became adverse when the pottah was granted to him. *SUBBARAYA v. 50. — Denial of right of fishery in river—Licensees on payment of rent of fishery in navigable river—Suit for ejectment.—In an ejectment suit in respect of a julkur in a navigable river, the defendant, if he has paid rent to the plaintiff or his predecessors, is precluded from raising a defence that the plaintiff cannot have an exclusive right of fishery in a navigable river. *GOUB HABI MAL v. 51. — Denial of title of person supposed to be landlord—Payment of rent—Title.—In a suit for rent by a patnidar, who claimed under a lease granted him by a Hindu widow, whose husband had left a will giving her no power to alienate, Held that, although it was shown that the widow had been in receipt of rents, the suit was rightly dismissed. One who pays rent to another, believing him to be the landlord's representative, is not estopped from afterwards showing the want of title in that other: so here the defendant was not estopped from showing that, under the deceased husband's will, the plaintiff had no title. *BANER MADHUS GHOSH v. TILLESUREN KOER v. ASMEKH KOER [24 W. R., 101]

52. — Landlord and tenant—Collusion.—The plaintiff in an ejectment suit had established in a former suit that land formerly the property of the second defendant's father had been sold under a decree and purchased benami for him (the plaintiff), and that a rent agreement in respect of the same lands entered into between the ostensible purchaser and the first defendant had also been entered into by the former on his behalf; and possession had been formally delivered to the plaintiff under process of Court. It now appeared that the second defendant, who contested the validity as against him of the decree under which the land was sold, having withdrawn a suit filed by him to declare the sale invalid as against him after his father's death, had colluded with the first defendant and collected rent from him. Held that the second defendant, having come in by collusion with the first defendant, was precluded from denying the plaintiff's title and was liable to the plaintiff for the rent collected by him from the first defendant. PASUPATI v. NARAYANA. . . I. L. R., 13 Mad., 335

53. — Mortgage and mortgagee.—The karnavan of a Malabar tarwad, having the jeem title to certain land and holding the uraima right in a certain public devasom to which other land belonged, demised lands of both descriptions on kanom to the defendants' tarwad, and subsequently executed to the plaintiff a melkanom of the first-mentioned land and purported to sell to him the jeem title to the last-mentioned land. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to redeem the kanom and to recover arrears of rent, Held that the defendants were not estopped from denying the plaintiff's right to redeem on the ground that he did not represent the devasom; and that the plaintiff, who had denied the title of the devasom in the Court of first instance, was not entitled to redeem the kanom as a whole, by virtue of his admitted title to part of the premises comprised in it. KONNA PANIKAR v. KARUNAKARA [I. L. R., 16 Mad., 323]

54. — Mortgage by tenant at fixed rates—Ejectment of mortgagee by zamindar—Suit for redemption against mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property.—The rule of law which prohibits a mortgagee or tenant from disputing his mortgagee's or landlord's title does not bar the mortgagee or tenant from showing that the title of his mortgagee or landlord under which he entered has determined. Hence where a tenant at fixed rates, who, having mortgaged his fixed rate holding by a usufructuary mortgage and put the mortgagee in possession, was ejected by the zamindar, subsequently sued the mortgagee, who had remained in possession after his mortgagor's ejection, for redemption, it was held that the mortgagee could plead successfully that the mortgagor's interest in the holding had determined by the ejection of the mortgagor. NAKCHEDI BHAGAT v. [14 W. R., 391]

56. — Denial in former suit of relationship of landlord and tenant—Suit for possession.—A rent suit having been dismissed upon defendant denying that he was a tenant of the plaintiff, the latter sued the former for khas possession. 57. — Payment of rent, Suit to contest title after—Payment under erroneous impression.—The plaintiffs were the registered holders of the village of Mahkoli, in the Ahmedabad Collectorate, for which they obtained a sanad in 1864, under Bombay Act VII of 1863. The defendants were the descendants of the original owners of the village, who, about 1768, finding themselves unable to meet the expense attaching to the village, gave up their title to it to the ancestors of the plaintiffs, on condition of retaining a third of the lands rent-free as their vants or share, subject to no other condition but a house tax. Held that the circumstances did not constitute the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. The fact that the defendant had for some years paid to the plaintiffs part of the amount of quit-rent levied from the plaintiffs by Government did not estop the defendants, when better informed of their rights, from contesting the title of the plaintiffs to any further payments. JESINGBHAI v. HATAJI

58. — Acceptance of lease under coercion—Payment of rent.—A person accepting a lease under coercion is not bound by such acceptance, nor do payments of rent by him to the person granting the lease estop him from questioning the title of the payee, unless the payee let him into possession. Even then the effect of the payment as an estoppel would be confined to the title of the payee at

60. — Statement in bond—Evidence of amount of consideration actually received.—Where a suit was brought upon two native bonds executed by the defendant for the principal and interest received, and the bonds contained a statement that the principal had been borrowed and received in cash, Held that it was open to the defendant to show by evidence that only a portion of the principal sum had been received by him. The strict technical doctrine of English law as to estoppels in the case of deeds under seal does not apply to the written instruments ordinarily in use amongst the natives of India. GAUREVALLABA RAMCHANDRA BOMAYA NAYIK v. 61. — Stipulation in bond—Proof of payment—Omission to endorse payment.—A stipulation in a bond that all payments should be endorsed on the back thereof, and that all other pleas of repayment would be futile, does not estop the defendant from proving by other means that the debt, or part of it, has been satisfied. KALSH DASS MITTAL v. 65. ————— Effect of valid award on reference to arbitration—Defence of submission to arbitration and award upon the matter in suit before suit brought.—An award upon a question referred to arbitrators on whose part no misconduct or mistake appears, concludes the parties who have submitted to the reference from afterwards contesting in a suit the question so referred and disposed of by the award. Two widows of a deceased Hindu referred generally to arbitrators the question of their rights, respectively, in the estate of their deceased husband, including the matter whether there was, or was not, any cause disentitling the widow who afterwards brought this suit for her share in the estate against the other who had obtained possession of the whole. The arbitrators declared her to be disentitled to succeed to any portion of the estate, and awarded her maintenance only. Held that, in the absence of mistake or misconduct on the part of the arbitrators, the award was binding on the parties. BRAGOTI v. 66. ————— Contract—Construction of agreement to refer—Breach of contract.—The plaintiffs, on the 4th August 1881, entered into a contract with the defendant for the sale to the latter of a quantity of goods of a certain description "to be delivered up to the 31st December 1881." The plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of goods of the same description to others before 1st

December 1881; and the contract contained an arbitration-clause to the effect that "if the buyers object to accept all or any of the goods offered to them by the sellers in fulfilment of the contract on the ground of any variance, difference from the sample or muster, inferiority in weight or quality or colour, or damage or defect, or any other ground whatsoever," such objections should, in case of disagreement, be referred to two arbitrators, one to be named by the sellers and the other by the buyers. Such arbitrators to decide "whether the buyers' objections were valid, and if so, what allowance on the whole contract price will be a reasonably adequate compensation to the buyers for such variance, difference, inferiority, damage, or defect, if any, and such decision shall be final and binding on both parties." If either buyers or sellers failed "to name an arbitrator within two days after being requested by the other to do so, the decision of the arbitrators named by the buyers or sellers, as the case may be, shall be final and binding on both parties." The goods arrived in Calcutta between the 4th and 24th November 1881. On the 15th August the plaintiffs entered into other contracts with other buyers for the sale of the same description of goods at a lower price than that at which they had sold to the defendant; these contracts were on the terms that the goods were not to arrive in Calcutta until after the 31st December 1881. The defendant refused to accept the goods on the ground that the plaintiffs had committed a breach of the contract by entering into other agreements for sale of the same description of goods before the 1st December, and refused to pay the difference between the contract price and the market value which the plaintiffs demanded from him. The plaintiffs thereupon appointed an arbitrator, who (the defendant declining to appoint an arbitrator) proceeded to act in the matter, and, finding that the plaintiffs had not committed a breach of the contract, made an award in their favour for Rs50, the difference in price of the goods at the contract and market values. The plaintiffs sued to recover the amount due to them under the award, or in the alternative for Rs50 as damages for non-acceptance of the goods. Held that the defendant was not estopped by the award from setting up the breach of the stipulation not to sell other goods of the same description before the 1st December 1881 as a defence to the suit. Per GABE, C.J.—The question whether the plaintiffs, by making the other contract, had committed a breach of the stipulation, was not properly a subject of reference to the arbitrator under the arbitration clause. The general words in that clause, "or any other grounds whatsoever," mean any other grounds of a like character, and do not include a pure question of law. CARLISLES, NEPHEWS & CO. v. 71. ——— Agreement not to execute decree—Wrongful execution in breach of agreement—Deed of conditional sale—Defeating claims of third persons—Maxim, "In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis."—The plaintiff sued in 1876 to recover possession of immoveable property which the defendant had obtained in 1873, in execution of an ex-parte decree dated the 8th June 1861. That decree was founded on a deed purporting to be a deed of conditional sale dated the 24th December 1853 executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant. The plaintiff alleged that the deed was executed in order to protect the property against the claims of plaintiff's son, and the plaintiff sought to set it aside on account of defendant's breach of an agreement dated the 16th January 1856, whereby the defendant stipulated that plaintiff's possession should not be disturbed. The defendant, inter alia, pleaded estoppel. Held that plaintiff was not estopped from showing the real truth of the transaction between plaintiff and defendant, and from obtaining relief through the Court against defendant's breach of good faith, because of plaintiff's attempt to hinder or defeat the possible claim of a third party, the maxim "In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis" not being applicable without qualification to India, where justice, equity, and good conscience require no more than that a party should be precluded from contradicting, to the prejudice of another, an instrument pretending to the solemnity of a deed, when the parties claiming under it or their representatives have been induced to alter their position on the faith of such instrument. PARAM SINGH v. 72. ——— Benami conveyance—Relation of landlord and tenant.—The plaintiff having sued to obtain possession of certain land which the defendant held as tenant, and in respect of which he had for some years paid rent, the defendant alleged that, prior to the time when he became tenant, the plaintiff had for good consideration conveyed to him the premises leased, together with other property. This conveyance was found to be a mere benami transaction. Held that the plaintiff was not estopped from asserting the tenancy, and under the circumstances was entitled to recover. SABUKTULLA v. 73. ——— Mortgage fraudulently made to defeat execution of decree—Right of mortgagor to sue subsequently to recover possession.—In 1851 T obtained a decree against G, the father of the plaintiff. In order to defeat the execution of that decree, G, in collusion with one B, permitted the latter to obtain a decree based upon an award against him, and to sell the land in execution, at which sale B himself and another person purchased it. In 1857 these purchasers sold the property to V (defendant No. 1). In 1858 T attached the land in execution of his decree, but the attachment was raised on the application of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who alleged that the property was theirs. In 1876 the plaintiff, who was the son of G, sued the defendants to recover possession. He alleged that the transaction was only ostensibly a sale, but was really a mortgage made by his father to the defendants, and that the defendants held as mortgagees. Two documents were produced (exhibits 19 and 18), dated respectively in the years 1856 and 1862, whereby defendant No. 1 as a mortgagee acknowledged the receipt of two sums of Rs 375 from G. It further appeared that on the faith of exhibit 18 the defendants had been permitted to remain in possession for ten years without disturbance as mortgagees. The subordinate Courts held that the decree, sale, and re-sale of the lands were fraudulent and collusive transactions, and that, G having been a party to the fraud, the plaintiff could not recover the lands from the defendants. On appeal,—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover; that the defendants, having accepted repayment of Rs 750 as mortgagees, and, as such, having been permitted to remain in possession of the lands without disturbance, were estopped from setting themselves up as purchasers or owners, which false character had been merely assumed for the purpose of defeating the execution of the decrees obtained by T. 74. ——— Mortgage without being owner of property—Subsequent ownership by mortgagor of the same property—Auction-purchaser—Validity of mortgage.—In 1871, M, the mortgagee of certain property, styling himself the owner of it, mortgaged it to S. In 1875 M became the owner of such property by purchase. In 1877 such property was put up for sale in execution of a decree against M, and A purchased it. S subsequently sued M and A to enforce the mortgage of such property to him by M. Held that, inasmuch as, if S had at any time sued M to enforce such mortgage after he had become the owner of the mortgaged property and before A had purchased it, M would have been estopped from denying the validity of such mortgage, and as there was nothing fraudulent in such mortgage, and A had purchased with a knowledge of the facts, after M had become the owner, A was estopped from denying the validity of such mortgage, and the mortgaged property was liable in his hands to S's claim. 75. ——— Declaration in deed of sale—Admission.—The mere fact of a vendor declaring in her deed of sale of a moiety of a landed estate that she was the proprietor only of that moiety, and that the other moiety belonged to her deceased sister's son, was held not to be conclusive evidence against her being proprietor of the other moiety, nor to injure the right of a purchaser from her of such moiety. 76. ——— Suit on a document executed by defendant in which he was described as a trader—Plea in suit that he was an agriculturist—Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).—The mere fact that the defendant described himself in the instrument, on which the suit was brought, as a trader, would not of itself estop him from pleading at the trial that he was an agriculturist, and entitled to the protection of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act. There must be evidence to show that by describing himself as a "trader" he represented himself as a trader, and intended that that representation should be acted on by the plaintiff. KADAPPA v. Held that A was not estopped from proving that C had left a son, E, who survived him, and that D was entitled to the property as E's heir, and that D's heir could give the title to such property. 80. ——— Parties to suit both deriving title from the same document—Question of validity of document—Suit for possession.—The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover a sum of money by attachment and sale of certain property in the legal possession of the defendant. Both the plaintiff and the defendant professed to derive their title by virtue of a document which the Court found was invalid according to Mahomedan law. Held that the defendant was not estopped from denying its validity, and the Court was not bound to hold that the document, as between the parties, was valid. The defendant being in possession, it was for the plaintiff to establish her right to attach and sell the property by showing superior title in herself, whatever might be the rights of the defendant. 81. ——— Rights of transferee of sub-lessee—Lease, Construction of—Right to deny validity of lease.—A Government farmer of a village (the farm being for his life) sub-leased it, and the sub-lessee, in consideration of a certain sum, made a perpetual lease in favour of the defendant at a certain annual quit-rent. Subsequently the proprietary settlement of the village (the possession being conditional on expiry of farm) was made with the sub-lessee, whose proprietary rights having been sold at auction were purchased by the plaintiff, who sued to set aside the lease. Held, on the construction of the lease, that the proprietor professed it to be a perpetual lease, without reference to its determination on the expiry of the sub-lease, and that the auction-purchaser, being the locum tenens of the person whose rights he purchased, was estopped, as would have been the latter, from questioning the validity of the lease in favour of the defendant. KURN CHOWBRY v. JANKEN PERSAD. 1 Agra, 164

82. — Acquiescence—Right of Hindu widows—Effect of alienation of interest in subject of suit.—A Hindu dying intestate left two widows (D and M) as his co-heiresses. A document put forward by a third party (H) as a will of the deceased having been set aside by the Courts, an order was passed in a summary suit, under Act XIX of 1841, by which the property was equally divided between the widows. One of them (D) subsequently died, leaving a will disposing of her share to her relatives. Steps were taken during D's life by the other widow (M) and by H to resist the registration of the will; and after D's death M applied for the attachment of D's share and the appointment of a curator. Her application being dismissed, she commenced a regular suit. Held that M's original acquiescence in the title set up by H did not deprive her of any rights which accrued to her as one of the co-heirs of her husband when that claim was decided to be untenable, nor could her alleged alienation of her share bar her present suit. BRUWANDERN DOBEY v. 84. — Minor, Contract by—Deed of relinquishment executed by minor—Ratification by acquiescence.—A sued in 1885 to recover certain estates from B, alleging claim under his adoption, which took place in 1865. In 1875 A, being still a minor, relinquished by deed his claim to the estates for Rs. 12,000, but now alleged that he thought he was relinquishing it only in favour of the defendant's predecessor in title, who died in 1883, having been in possession of the estates since 1867. The plaintiff attained his majority in 1878. Held that, whether the cause of action arose in 1865 or 1867, it was equally barred from 1879; and that the plaintiff was bound by the deed of relinquishment. Assuming the plaintiff was a minor of 15 years of age at the date of the deed of relinquishment, it is not likely he would not have understood its effect, or that he failed to ascertain it when he attained his majority in 1878. His conduct of acquiescence in it had, moreover, acted as a ratification of the contract of relinquishment. VENKATACHALAM v. MAHALAKSHMANNA [I. L. R., 10 Mad., 272

85. — Objection of minority raised after completion of purchase and possession by vendee.—The vendee in a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption set up as a defence to the suit that the sale was invalid, on the ground that they were minors, and therefore incompetent to contract. Held that, as they had paid their money to the vendor and the conveyance had been perfected, and they were in possession of the property, they were estopped from urging such ground. KRAM KARAM v. 88. — Destruction of document—Omnia presumuntur contra spoliatores.—In a suit brought against a Collector to compel him to refrain from preventing the plaintiff executing his decree against certain land, the only issue being whether the land was the private property of the judgment-debtors or Government service land, the plaintiff alleged that the land had been granted in fee mainly by a sanad which he petitioned the mamlatdar of the pergunnah to search for and send to the Collector; and on reference by the High Court, the District Judge found that the Collector did destroy the document that purported to be a copy of a sanad, such as the plaintiff petitioned the mamlatdar to send for. Held that it was not competent for the defendant to say that the document was not such a one as could be legally admitted in evidence, and that the case came within the rule, Omnia presumuntur contra spoliatores. ARDESHIR DHANJIBHAI v. The objection was disallowed under s. 246 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859). No suit was brought to question this order. The first mortgage was not paid off, and the mortgage premises were brought to sale. The purchaser, who was the first mortgagee, now sued for possession of the land, and his claim was resisted by the second mortgagee. Held (1) that the non-joinder of the present defendant in the suit on the mortgage constituted no bar to the present suit; (2) that the second mortgagee was estopped

Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 246—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 241, 253—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 11—Limitation Act (IX of 1871), sch. II, art. 15—Suit for possession.—In certain execution-proceedings land was attached, but before the sale the judgment-debtors, with the permission of the Court, sold the land to the plaintiffs. Previous to this sale, certain persons had come forward in the execution-proceedings, and had claimed the land as having been sold to them by the father of the judgment-debtors: this claim was disallowed in November 1876. In 1881 the plaintiffs, alleging that they had been dispossessed by certain persons, amongst whom were the claimants in the execution-proceedings, brought a suit to recover possession of this land against these persons. This suit was decided against the plaintiffs in the lower Appellate Court, on the ground that they had failed to prove that they had been in possession of the land twelve years before suit. On appeal to the High Court, the plaintiffs, appellants, contended that the claim of the defendants in the execution-proceedings having been rejected, and they not having brought a regular suit within one year from the order of rejection to establish their right to possession, the defendants were prevented by that order from contending that the plaintiffs had not been in possession at the time of that order. Held that the order did not operate as an estoppel against the defendants; and even if it could so operate, it would not do so until the time had run out within which they could have brought a suit to establish their right to possession, and that such time had not expired. GEND. 121. ———— Estoppel caused by representation on which action has followed —Title, as between rival purchasers supported by an estoppel affecting the assignee of the person estopped—Notice.—The law enacted in the Evidence Act, 1872, s. 115, relating to estoppel as a consequence of declaration, act, or omission causing another's belief, and action thereon, does not differ from the English law on that subject, of which the general principle is stated in Cairncross v. Lorrimer, 9 H. L. C., 829. The main question, in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned, is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive, or on the knowledge of the matter, on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act, or omission has induced another to act, or to abstain from acting, should have been fraudulent, or that he should not have been under a mistake or misapprehension. The word "intentionally" seems to have been used in s. 115 for the purpose of declaring the law as it had been stated to be in judgments in England. On this point, the opinions expressed in the judgments in Ganga Sahai v. Hirah Singh, I. L. R., 3 All., 809, and in Fishun v. Krishnan, I. L. R., 7 Mad., 3, referred to and disapproved. A widow had held benami, for her husband during his life, property as to which he had executed a hibanama in her favour. After his death, she mortgaged the property, her son representing her in the transaction. After her death, in a suit between rival purchasers of part of the property comprised in the hibanama and in the mortgage, the plaintiff derived his title from the son, having purchased his inherited share of the estate, while the defendants relied on a purchase at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by the mortgagee. Held that s. 115 of the Evidence Act was applicable. The son had represented that the hiba gave a right to his mother to mortgage, and consequently neither he nor his representative in estate could be allowed to deny the truth of this representation, intentionally made on his part, which also had been acted on by the mortgagee; and it made no difference that the son had not had a fraudulent intention. As a result of the estoppel upon the son, any purchaser of the mortgagee's interest, at a sale regularly carried out, would have acquired a valid title to the property, although such purchaser might have been fully aware of all the circumstances. SARAT CHUNDER DEY v. Held on appeal (affirming the above decision) s. 115 of the Evidence Act has no application to contracts by infants; but the term "person" in that section applies only to a person of full age and competent to enter into contracts. The words "person" and "party" in s. 64 of the Contract Act are interchangeable, and mean such a person as is referred to in s. 11 of that Act, i.e., a person competent to contract. A mortgagor employing an attorney, who also acts for the mortgagees in the mortgage transaction, must be taken to have notice of all facts brought to the knowledge of the attorney; and therefore, where the Court rescinded the contract of mortgage on the ground of the mortgagor's infancy, and found that

186. — Transfer of occupancy-rights with zamindar's consent—Acceptance of rent by zamindar from vendees—Contract Act, ss. 2, 23—Evidence Act, ss. 115, 116.—Under a deed, dated in 1879, the occupancy-tenants of land in a village sold their occupancy-rights, and the zamindars instituted a suit for a declaration that the sale-deed was invalid under s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873 (the N. W. P. Rent Act in force in 1879), and for ejectment of the vendees, who had obtained possession of the land. It was found that the zamindars had consented to the sale to the vendees, and received from them arrears of rent due on the holding by the vendors, and had recognized them as tenants. Held by OLDFIELD, J. (whose opinion prevailed), that sales of occupancy-rights were not void under s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873, when made with the consent of the landlord; that the sale which the zamindars had consented to was valid; and that, under any circumstances, they were estopped by their conduct from bringing a suit to set aside the sale. Per MAHMOOD, J.—That the sale-deed was invalid with reference to the provisions of ss. 2 and 23 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as its object was the transfer of occupancy-rights, which was prohibited by s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873. In a suit by the President, on behalf of the Commissioners, brought after the expiry of the year, for a portion of the sum due to them by the defendant,—Held that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had fully performed all things to be performed on his part and both parties had acted under the agreement, though it was not formally executed by the Commissioners, and as the defendant had had the full benefit of the contract, it would be contrary to equity and good conscience to allow him to set up as ground of defence that there was no contract in point of law. GOODRICH v. 156. ——— Defence suppressed in former suit—Right to rely on it in subsequent suit.—In a former suit the present defendant sued as owner by right of inheritance to recover the property of her deceased husband, and the present plaintiff resisted that suit on the ground of her preferential right to inherit. Having failed in that suit, plaintiff brought the present suit to recover half the property on the basis of a family agreement made between her and the present defendant's deceased husband. This agreement was designedly suppressed at the period of the former suit. Held that the suit should be dismissed; that plaintiff in the present suit insisted upon a valid family compact varying the ordinary rules of inheritance, having, however, previously appealed to that general rule and designedly kept back the compact upon which she now sought to insist; and that there could be no stronger case of an absolute waiver of that contract and of conduct rendering it wholly inequitable to permit her now to insist upon it. Semble—Where a defendant has been sued by a plaintiff upon his right of ownership, plaintiff's recovery negates all grounds of defence to that action then existent and within the plaintiff's knowledge. JANAKI AMMAL v. 160. ——— Omission to assert a claim in execution-proceedings—Execution of decree.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were sued by a creditor of their undivided grand-uncle D as his legal representatives, and a decree was obtained against them as such. In execution of that decree, the house in dispute was put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff. After satisfying the decree, the surplus of the sale-proceeds was paid to the defendants, who received it and divided it between themselves. Plaintiff, having been obstructed by the defendants in obtaining possession of the house, brought the present suit to recover possession. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the house was the undivided family property of the defendants, and that the plaintiff should bring a partition suit. The plaintiff appealed to the Assistant Judge, who was of opinion that the defendant's omission to set up their title to the property in question at the execution-sale and the acceptance of the surplus of the proceeds of sale estopped them from impeaching the sale and setting up their title. He therefore reversed the lower Court's decree, and awarded the house to the plaintiff. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court, Held, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the defendants were not estopped from setting up their title. Proceedings in execution are in rem as regards the judgment-debtor, and he is in no way called upon to notice them. It was not suggested that the defendants took any part in the execution-proceedings or stood by so as to induce bidders to suppose that they claimed no interest other than as representatives of the original judgment-debtor, or that their silence misled the bidders at the sale. As to the reception of the residue of the purchase-money after satisfaction of the judgment-debt, it took place after the sale was completed. GURUPADAPA v. IRAPA

161. ——— Acceptance of sum and receipt in full in satisfaction of decree—Omission to allow for difference in exchange on Privy Council decree.—A obtained a decree against B in the Privy Council for the sum of £213-10. A applied to the High Court to direct execution of this decree for the sum of Rs. 500-1, being the equivalent of £213-10, at the then rate of exchange. This application, together with the Privy Council decree, was sent down to the lower Court, where execution was issued for the equivalent in rupees of £213-10, taking the rupee as equivalent to two shillings. sum was paid to the decree-holder, who signed a receipt in full. Held that, under the circumstances, the decree-holder was not bound by the receipt in full, and that he was entitled to receive the further sum of Rs65-1 which the judgment-debtor had paid into Court. LANHPATTY THAKOORANI v. 163. ——— Kistbundi given by party on attaining majority.—Subsequent dispute of liability.—The appellants made a claim upon the respondents in respect of certain bonds given during their minority by their executor and guardian. On attaining majority, the respondents, being desirous of avoiding payment, were advised that they could only do so by instituting a suit to which the executor must be a party, and in which a settlement of his accounts would be required. Rather than do this, they came to terms with the appellant in order to obtain time for the payment of the debt by instalments, and a kistbundi was accordingly executed. Held that the respondents could not now, after the death of their guardian, dispute their liability for a debt which they had thus deliberately undertaken to pay. GHO-LAS KHOONWARNEE BHEE v. 164. ——— Suit after compromise and decree.—Cause of action—Res judicata.—A, who was in partnership with B, C, and D, brought a suit in the Zillah Court of Jessore against B, C, and D, for an account and division of the partnership estate. An arrangement was come to between the parties, on the faith of which A filed a razeenamah, stating that his claim was satisfied, and allowed a decree to go against him in terms of the razeenamah. The defendants failed to carry out their part of the arrangement. A petitioned the Zillah Court for leave to withdraw his petition of compromise, and that the suit might proceed as if no decree had been passed, but the Court refused the petition. The principal place of business of the defendants was in Calcutta. In the Court below an application was made to have the plaint taken off the file on the ground that it disclosed no cause of action, but showed that the plaintiff was estopped from suing, but the application was rejected. Held on appeal that A was not barred from bringing a suit in the High Court to compel the defendants to perform the agreement, upon the basis of which the decree was obtained in the Zillah Court, either by the fact of the consideration of the agreement being the consent of A to the compromise of the suit or by the decree of the

165. ——— Compromise of execution of decree.—Execution of compromise as a decree—Acquiescence.—The parties to a decree for the payment of money altered by agreement such decree as regards the mode of payment and the interest payable. For many years such agreement was executed as a decree, without objection being taken by the judgment-debtor. On the 1st March 1878, the holder of such decree applied for execution of such agreement. The judgment-debtor objected that such agreement could not be executed as a decree, and such application should, therefore, be disallowed. Held (OLDFIELD, J., dissenting) that such agreement could not be executed as a decree, and such application could not be entertained, and that the judgment-debtor was not, by reason that he had submitted to the execution of such agreement as a decree, estopped from objecting to its continued execution as a decree. DEHI RAI v. 166. ——— Contract superseding decree.—A judgment-debtor, against whom a decree for money was in course of execution, presented a petition to the Court executing the decree, in which it was stated that a part of the money payable under the decree had been paid; that it had been agreed that a part of the balance should be set off against a debt due to the judgment-debtor to be realized by the decree-holder, and the remainder should be paid by the judgment-debtor by certain instalments; and that, if default were made in payment of any one instalment, the decree-holder should be at liberty to execute the decree for the whole amount, and the judgment-debtor asked the Court to sanction the arrangement. The decree-holder expressed his assent to the arrangement, and the Court recorded a proceeding reciting the arrangement, and releasing from attachment property of the judgment-debtor which had been attached. Default having been made, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree. Held that the petition of the judgment-debtor set out above did not amount to, nor was it any evidence of, a new contract superseding the decree, and the decree-holder was not estopped therefore from executing the decree, which therefore the Court allowed to be executed. Dehi Rai v. appeared that in a former suit the defendants had already been adjudged a 12-annas share in the monzah. The plaintiff, who became the purchaser, claimed to be entitled to the whole 16 annas, alleging that he had been misled by the description of the property sold, and contending that the defendants were estopped, under s. 115 of the Evidence Act, from denying that 16 annas had been put up for sale. Held that, to bring the case within s. 115 of the Evidence Act, the following findings were necessary: (1) That the plaintiff believed that the judgment-debtor, whose rights and interest were sold, was the owner of the whole 16 annas; (2) that acting upon that belief he purchased the property at the sale; (3) that belief, and the plaintiff's so acting upon that belief, were brought about by some declaration, or act, or omission, on the part of the defendant, which declaration, act, or omission were intentionally made in order to produce that result; and that, inasmuch as the finding of the District Judge had not amounted to this, there was no estoppel. SOLOMON v. 168. — Petition to postpone sale in execution of decree.—To petition for the postponement of a sale in execution of decree is not an intentional causing or permitting the decree-holder to believe that the judgment-debtor admits that the decree can be legally executed, and occasions no estoppel within the Evidence Act, 1872, s. 115. The judgment-debtor can, notwithstanding his having filed such a petition, maintain that execution is barred by lapse of time. MINA KONWARI v. JUGGAT SETANI

The purchaser then sued the decree-holder for arrears of malikana, and the plea set up by the defendant was limitation. Held that, as the defendant had caused the right to malikana to be sold, he could not avail himself in equity of the plea of limitation, and say that what was purchased was not a substantial right actually existing at the time. ALAI AHMED v. It appeared that the plaintiff had previously attached and brought to sale the mortgaged premises in execution of a decree against defendant No. 1, and that the other defendants had purchased at the Court-sale without notice of the plaintiff's mortgage, which was not referred to in the attachment lists or sale certificates. Held that the plaintiff was estopped from setting up his present claim. JAGANATHA v. In 1892 the plaintiff, who was aware of the existence of this instrument, brought the land comprised in it to sale in execution of a money-decree obtained by him against the executant, and defendant No. 3 became the purchaser. At the time of the sale the plaintiff gave no notice of the existence of the encumbrance. In a suit to recover the principal and interest due on the hypothecation bond, Held that the plaintiff was estopped from recovering the secured debt against the land. KASTURI v. to enforce payment of the debt due by the deceased S, and he made B, the mother of S, defendant in the suit, omitting T altogether. On 30th August 1875 M obtained an ex-parte decree, and on the 26th July 1880 the house of S, then in the possession of B, was sold in execution, and the first defendant, R, purchased it. On 6th September 1880 the sale was confirmed, and on 26th November 1880 R was put into possession. On the 10th of December 1880, one S B presented a petition on behalf, as he alleged, of the plaintiff T, the widow of S, to set aside the sale. He did not produce any authority from her, and his application was rejected on the 14th June 1881. On the 31st October 1878, T adopted the plaintiff B, under an authority, as she alleged, of her deceased husband, S. In 1881 T filed the present suit on behalf of her adopted son B to set aside the sale and to recover the house. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to have the sale set aside, and to recover possession of the house. The estate was vested in T as legal representative of her deceased husband. Had T wilfully put forward B as the representative of S so as to deceive and mislead M, then, no doubt, she might be held bound by the decree obtained by the latter against B. Her mere quiescence while M wilfully sued the wrong person could not affect her legal rights or deprive her adopted son, the plaintiff B, of his rights. He could not be bound by suit and sale to which he was not a party either in person or by representation. Held also that T was not bound to come forward to assert her ownership when the property was attached and sold under M's decree. The rule—that one who, knowing his own title, stands by and encourages a purchase of property as another's, will not be allowed to dispute the validity of the sale—implies a wilful misleading of the purchaser by some breach of duty on the owner's part. In this case there was nothing more than mere quiescence on the part of T. BASWANTAPA SHIDAPA v. RANU. I. L. R., 9 Bom., 86

176. — Acquiescence in execution-proceedings—Representatives of judgment-debtor—Death of party to suit before final decree in appeal—Subsequent proceedings in execution taken against representatives of such party.—A decree was given to the defendant (then plaintiff) in 1856 for possession of land and mesne profits against numerous defendants, including one Dawan Rai. Some of the judgment-debtors, including Dawan Rai, appealed to the Sadr Diwani Adalat, but before the decree of the Sadr Diwani Adalat was passed, Dawan Singh died. No application was made to put any representative of Dawan Rai on the record; but in 1881 (the amount of the mesne profits payable under the decree having been finally determined in 1877), certain persons were made parties, as representatives of Dawan Rai, to various proceedings in execution of the decree for mesne profits, which ended in the sale of certain property which had been of Dawan Rai in his lifetime. Subsequently, the said representatives of Dawan Rai brought a suit to recover the property sold as above described on the ground that they were no parties to the decree under execution. Held that, as it had not been shown that by reason of the plaintiffs not objecting that they had been improperly brought on to the record of the execution of proceedings the defendant had been induced to accept a less favourable arrangement for the satisfaction of the decree than he might otherwise have done, there was no estoppel against the plaintiffs. *BENI PRASAD KUNWAR v. 177. — Mistake as to what was sold in proclamation of sale—Purchase by decree-holder.—M, a judgment-creditor, having attached certain land of his judgment-debtor, entered, by mistake, one parcel thereof in the proclamation of sale as two parcels having different numbers in the list of property to be sold. This parcel was put up for sale and purchased by the decree-holder himself, and was subsequently put up for sale and purchased by T. In a suit brought by T against M to restrain M from entering on the land,—Held that M was estopped by his conduct from setting up his title as purchaser against T. TUMAPPA CHETTI v. MURUGAPPA CHETTI. I. L. R., 7 Mad., 107

178. — Disclaimer of title in former suit—Evidence Act, s. 115—Sale in execution of decree—Intervenor in rent suit.—A purchase by a mortgagee, at a sale in execution of a decree upon his mortgage, of the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor, who has been estopped from asserting a title to the property as against certain parties, does not place such mortgagee in a better position as regards the estoppel. A suit for rent by a zamindar and patnidar against a darpatnidar was defeated by the defence of the latter that he had conveyed his interest to others against whom the former afterwards obtained a decree, and brought the darpatni to sale in execution, buying their right, title, and interest therein himself. From the darpatnidar who had thus disclaimed title, a third party claimed to be mortgagee, and set up a decree on his mortgage followed by a purchase of the tenure at a sale in execution. He was thereupon allowed to intervene in a suit for rent brought by the zamindar and patnidar against an ijaradar of lands within the darpatni estate. Held that, notwithstanding this purchase, the intervening mortgagee was bound by the estoppel arising out of the mortgagor's disclaimer of title in the suit above mentioned. *PORESHNATH MUKERJEE v. In a suit for foreclosure of the plaintiff's mortgage against E and B, the lower Courts held that A was the true owner, but the lower Appellate Court did not decide whether the plaintiff's mortgage was a valid transaction. 186. — Recital in conveyance—Purchaser, Effect of admissions on—Admissions by conduct.—The deed of conveyance of land in Calcutta recited that the vendor was "seised of, or otherwise well entitled" to, the property intended to be sold "for an estate of inheritance in fee-simple," and it purported to convey such an estate. In a suit for dower by the vendor's widow against the heirs of the purchaser, Held that, although, as between the plaintiff and the defendants, there was no estoppel which could prevent the defendants from proving that the estate sold was other than an estate in fee-simple, yet, as the purchaser bought the property as and for an estate of inheritance and paid for it as such, the recital was prima facie evidence against the purchaser and persons claiming through him, that the estate conveyed was what it purported to be, it being an admission by conduct of parties, which amounted to evidence against them. SARKIS v. 191. — Disqualification of a brother to share—Intention as evidenced by conduct—Waiver of rights—Hindu law—Inheritance—Mitakshara family.—Between the two surviving brothers of a Mitakshara family, the action of the elder to the younger, who had been born deaf and dumb, was such as to recognize for some years that the latter had a joint interest in the family property. The proper inference to be drawn from this was that the elder treated his brother as a member of the family, and entitled to equal rights until it had become clear that his disqualification would never be removed by his being cured. Their Lordships would not infer that there was an intention shown by the acts of the elder to waive the rights accruing to him in consequence of this disqualification, nor would they hold that his acts operated to create a new title in the younger. LALA MUDDUN GOPAL LAL v. A remoter reversioner to such estate was a witness to such instrument, and took a prominent part in making such arrangement, and the same had his full consent. it appeared that the debt for which the property was sold was begun in 1865, was increased in 1869, and re-affirmed in 1873 and 1875 under circumstances which would bind the family. A had lived jointly with his father, and acquiesced in his management of the property. Held that, the joint property being liable for the debt upon which the decree was obtained, and the purchaser having purchased the property bona fide, the plaintiff was not entitled to disturb the alienation; and further that, under the circumstances, he was estopped from claiming his share. DAMUDAS DASS v. 194. — Recognition of adoption by widow—Subsequent objection on ground of its invalidity.—Where it was not intended by the widow that her adopted son should succeed her in the management and enjoyment of the property without her consent, she may resist the claim of the adopted son to eject her on the ground of the invalidity of the adoption under the Hindu law, notwithstanding her previous treatment and recognition of the plaintiff as her adopted son, and her acknowledgment having been received and acted upon by the authorities without question. OOMRAO SINGH v. 197. — Estoppel by acts of ancestor when claiming through him—Taking lease from Government.—In a suit against S and G to recover possession with mesne profits of land of which the plaintiff had been dispossessed by G as lessee of the Government, he claimed the land as part of an estate (M) which belonged to him and his ancestors by the title under which it was held, and had been in their possession very long under that title, and that he had held the property as of right adversely to S for a period which sufficed to give him a title. The lower Court made the Government a party, and finding that the plaintiff's father had repeatedly taken from Government a farm of the villages in question after they had been declared not to be a portion of M, but of a resumed talukh, concluded that the plaintiff was estopped by the conduct of his father. Held that the Government ought not to have been made a party, for the plaintiff did not couch his plaint in any degree adversely to Government; and that the father's acts were no estoppel to the plaintiff such as to prevent him from instituting the present suit against S and G. RAM KUNJUN CHUCKENNETTY v. 198. — Acquiescence—Estoppel by acts of mother.—The plaintiff having known the nature of an original grant, and herself recognized and acquiesced in the acts of the leasee,—Held that she was bound by the acts of her mother, which as a whole resulted beneficially for the estate; and that in any case she was precluded from questioning them now by the law of limitation, the present suit having been brought more than twelve years subsequent to the death of the mother. PEDDOMONER DOSSEE v. 199. — Acquiescence in adoption—Subsequent objection to validity of adoption.—Where the defendant actively participated in the adoption of the plaintiff, the defendant's brother, and by many acts signified to the plaintiff and to his adopting father the defendant's complete acquiescence in the adoption, and thereby encouraged the plaintiff, who was an adult, to assent to such adoption, and allowed the adopting father to die in the belief that the adoption was valid, and finally concurred in the performance, by the plaintiff, of the funeral ceremonies of his adopting father,—Held that the defendant was estopped from disputing the validity of the adoption. SADASHIV MOKESHWAR GHATE v. 200. — Evidence Act, s. 115—Adoption-purchaser—Representation.—A, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, died on the 12th May 1867, leaving a widow B and a brother E, who was admittedly the next reversioner. In July 1867, B purported to adopt a son D to A, and subsequently in September 1867 obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858. In 1872 B obtained a loan from the plaintiff M of Rs. 9,000, and to secure its repayment executed as guardian of D a mortgage of seven mouzaha in favour of M. The money was advanced and the mortgage executed at the instigation of B and with his consent, and on his representation that D was the duly adopted son of A, and it was admitted that the money was advanced for, and specifically applied towards the payment of, decrees obtained against A in his lifetime and against his estate after his death. B died in 1878. On the 14th August 1880, M instituted a suit against D upon his mortgage, and in that suit he made S a party defendant, as being a purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzahas included in his mortgage. On the 26th June 1882, M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzaha. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree, M was opposed by L, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had, on the 8th November 1880, purchased five out of the seven mouzahas at a sale in execution of certain decrees against B. On the 28th February 1884, L's claim was allowed, and on the 11th August 1884 M brought this suit against L, S, B, and D and the decree-holders in the suit against B for a declaration of his right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of S. It was found as a fact that the adoption of D was invalid; that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity, and that L was the benamidar of S. It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzahas. The lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage-money from the five mouzahas in the hands of S. L and S appealed, and M filed a cross-appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S, as the representative of B, was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and thus, having been a party to M's first suit, the question as to the liability of the mouzaha to satisfy the mortgage lien was res judicata as against him. Held that a purchaser at an execution-sale is not as such the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 115 of the Evidence Act. Held further that, though B was estopped by his conduct from disputing the validity of the adoption or of M's rights as mortgagee, S, being an auction-purchaser, was not bound by B's acts, and was not estopped from disputing the adoption, as he derived his title by operation of law adversely to B, and was thus in a different position from a person claiming under a voluntary alienation. LALA PARSHU LAL v. 201. — Adoption—Suit to establish validity of adoption.—In a suit to establish the validity of an adoption of the plaintiff by the defendant, where it was shown that she had taken him in adoption, brought him up, and married him as the adopted son of her husband, and had put herself forward as his mother,—Held that the defendant was estopped from denying the validity of the plaintiff's adoption, and could not, when the plaintiff might have lost all right in his natural family, assert that she had not validly adopted him. RAVJI VINAYAKRAV JAGGANNATH SHANKARSETT v. 202. — Hindu law—Adoption.—A Hindu widow, professing to have authority from her husband to do so, took the second defendant in adoption, brought him up as her adopted son, and permitted him to perform the funeral ceremonies of her husband. Land to which she otherwise would have been entitled was attached in execution of a decree against defendant No. 2. She now sued to release the attachment, alleging the adoption was bad as having been unauthorized. Held that the plaintiff was estopped from raising this contention. KANNAMMAL v. VIRASAMI person as adopted son.—A, a Hindu, died leaving him surviving a mother B and three sisters. A had a brother P, who had been given in adoption to his maternal uncle R. On A's death, his property devolved on his mother B. B mortgaged the property to the defendant. The mortgage-bond was attested by P, who described himself as the adopted son of R. The defendant obtained a decree on the mortgage, and himself became the auction-purchaser at the execution sale. Thereupon A's sisters sued, as reversionary heirs, for a declaration that the sale to the defendant was valid only to the extent of B's life-interest in the property sold. The defendant pleaded that P's adoption was invalid, that on A's death the property vested in P, and that the plaintiffs had, therefore, no interest in the property in dispute. The Court of first instance allowed these pleas, and dismissed the suit. The Appellate Court held that the description in the mortgage bond, that P was the adopted son of R, amounted to an admission of the adoption by the defendant (mortgagee), and that he was therefore estopped from contesting the adoption. Held that the defendant was not estopped. The mere fact that P was described in the mortgage-bond as R's adopted son was not any evidence of an admission; and even if it were, it was not conclusive proof of the adoption (s. 31 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872). Held further that the fact treated by the lower Appellate Court as an estoppel had no such effect, as it had not caused or permitted the plaintiffs to believe the adoption to be valid and to act upon such belief. YASWANT PUTTU SHENVI v. RADHABAI

[I. L. R., 14 Bom., 312]

304.—Suit to set aside adoption in which the plaintiff has concurred—Hindu law, adoption.—The plaintiff, claiming a remote reversionary interest in the estates of a deceased Hindu, sued for a declaration of the invalidity of an adoption made by the widow. It appeared that the plaintiff himself had concurred in it at the time when it took place. Held that the plaintiff was not estopped from impugning the adoption by reason of his conduct at the time when it took place. GURULINGASWAMI v. RAMAKRISHNANMA

I. L. R., 18 Mad., 53

305.—Hindu law, adoption—Treating invalid adoption as effective and subsequently repudiating it—Suit to uphold adoption.—A childless Hindu widow, aged 19, agreed with the plaintiff's father to adopt the plaintiff, stating that her husband, who died at the age of 12, had given her authority to adopt. Subsequently she adopted the plaintiff and had his upanayanam performed in the adoptive family next day, and administered her husband's property as the minor's guardian for about 18 months, when she repudiated the adoption and refused to maintain the plaintiff. Held that, the adoption being invalid on the ground that the widow had not, as a fact, acted under authority from her husband, she was not estopped from denying the adoption by the fact of her having treated it as effective for the period of 18 months. In order that estoppel by conduct may raise an invalid adoption to the level of a valid adoption, there must have been a course of conduct long continued on the part of the adopting family, and the situation of the adoptee in his original family must have become so altered that it would be impossible to restore him to it. Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan, 7 Mad., 250, followed. PARVATIBAYAMMA v. RAMAKRISHNA RAU

306.—Treating adoption as valid for a long period.—In a suit to recover possession of certain land to which the plaintiff claimed title as the adopted son of a deceased Saraswati Brahman, it appeared that he had been taken in adoption by the widow of the deceased acting on the authority of her late husband, that datta homam was performed subsequently, and that the plaintiff had since been recognized as the adoptive son of the deceased and had acted accordingly during a period of twenty-five years. The defendant was in possession under a claim of title as reversionary heir, the widow having died shortly before suit. Held on the evidence that the defendant was estopped from denying the validity of the adoption. SANTAPPAYYA v. RANGAPPAYYA

I. L. R., 18 Mad., 397

307.—Mistake of law—Acknowledgment of adoption—Effect of recognition of status of adopted son as to property in Native State on his status as to property in British territory.—One G was possessed of considerable property both in British territory and in the territory of the Gaekwar of Baroda. He died in 1858, leaving three childless widows, L, S, and B. Shortly after his death, the plaintiff K, who was then a minor, was taken to Baroda by L, and, on her representations as well as those of her co-widows, he was acknowledged by the Gaekwar as their adopted son, and as such entitled to succeed to all the estate and privileges enjoyed by the deceased G. For several years afterwards the widows treated the plaintiff as the legitimate heir and successor of G in respect of the Baroda property. With regard to the estate in British territory, the widows at first put forward K as the adopted son of G. On their application, a certificate of heirship was issued under Regulation VIII of 1827, declaring that "the heirs were the widow heirs, and the minor K the son heir, of the deceased G." In one case the widows obtained a decree as guardians of the minor, on a bond executed in favour of K as heir to G. When the Bombay Summary Settlement Act (II of 1863) was passed, the widows accepted the summary settlement in respect of the inam holdings of their deceased husband, and thereupon the holdings were entered in their names in the Government records. Finding themselves secure in the possession of their husband's estate, the ladies now dropped the allegation of adoption and dealt with the property in British territory in their own right, and not as trustees or guardians of the minor K. In 1871 K sought to have part of the property in British territory transferred to his own name as the adopted son of G. The widows resisted this attempt and denied his adoption. In 1881 K made a similar attempt, but failed, the revenue authorities having eventually resolved to leave the question of K's title by adoption to be determined by the Civil Court. In 1884 K filed the present suit against the widows of G for a declaration of his adoption by G and for possession of G's estate in British territory. The widows denied the factum of the adoption, and disputed its validity. They also contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Agent for Sardars in the Dekkan, who tried the case, dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff's adoption by G was not proved, and that the claim was barred by limitation, the widows having been in adverse possession of the property in British territory for more than twelve years. The plaintiff appealed against this decision to the High Court, contending (inter alia) that the widows were estopped by their conduct from denying the plaintiff's adoption. Held that the widows were not estopped. Per BIRWOOD, J.—The fact that the plaintiff was put forward by the widows as their adopted son in the Baroda territory did not estop them from disputing the plaintiff's allegation that he was adopted by G. Nor was the circumstance that the widows and the plaintiff obtained a joint certificate of heirship to G in British territory conclusive as an estoppel. Per JARDINE, J.—There was now no estoppel (1) because there was nothing to show that the plaintiff had been led to alter his position in life through belief in any misrepresentations made by the widows; and (2) because the widows might have been, under the same mistake of law as the plaintiff, viz., that the Gackwar's recognition of his adoption created a status operative everywhere, as well in British territory as in the Gackwar's territory. *KUVERJI v. faith for valuable consideration and without notice of the trust. The mortgagee obtained a decree against the trustee for the sale of the land, and the land was sold in execution of that decree. The trustee subsequently brought a suit to recover the land from the purchaser on the ground that it was trust property, and that he had no power to transfer it. To this suit none of the beneficiaries under the trust were parties. Held that the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct from recovering possession of the land. GULZAR ALI v. FIDA ALI

211. — Declaration of husband as to wife's ownership of property—Subsequent claim of his heirs.—Where the husband during his lifetime did in every way, both publicly and privately, whenever called upon to make any representation on the subject, always represent that certain immovable property was his wife's, the purchaser from her could not after his death be equitably turned out of property in favour of his heirs. The heirs after his death would be as much bound by the father's misrepresentations as he would have been during his life. LUCHMUN CHUNDER GERR GOSSAIN v. KALLI CHURN SINGH

212. — Benami transaction—Misrepresentation—Heir when bound by the acts of ancestor.—B purchased some property from D (a member of a joint Mitakshara family) in the name of his wife K, with the object of concealing from certain persons that he was the real purchaser, and further lest, in the event of a dispute arising in respect of such property, which was heavily encumbered, his exclusive property might be prejudiced and attached with debt. After the death of her husband, K obtained a certificate of guardianship of her infant son S, in which she did not include this property, and in fact continued to treat the property as her own. During S's minority, O, the nephew of D, who was now of age, brought a suit for pre-emption against K in respect of this property, and obtained a consent decree under which he took possession. S then, on attaining majority, instituted a suit against C for the recovery of the property as the heir and representative of his father on the ground that K was a mere benamidar. The defence taken by C, amongst others, was that K was the real owner he believed her to be. Held that on the authority of Luchmun Chunder Gerr Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh, 19 W. R., 292, it was a good defence, for, even on the assumption that the purchase was benami, S as heir of B was bound by the misrepresentation of the latter. CHUNDER COOMAR v. HUMBUNG SAKAI

213. — Persons claiming under person who creates the benami.—The mere fact of a benami transfer does not in itself constitute such misrepresentation as to bind all persons claiming under the person who creates the benami. O made a benami gift of his property to his wife A. The deed of gift was registered and purported to be made in consideration of the fixed dower due to A. There was no mutation of names, but O managed the property as A's am-mukhtar under a general power-of-attorney executed by her in his favour. On the death of O, A mortgaged the property. At a sale in execution of a decree obtained by the mortgagees against A, the mortgaged property was purchased by the defendants. On the death of A, H and R, the son and daughter of A, sold their shares in the property, which they had inherited from their father O, to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendants for a declaration of his right to the shares of H and R and for partition,—Held that the acts of O were not such as to constitute an estoppel as against his heirs, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he sought. *Lachman Chunder Geer Gossain v. 214. ————— Equitable estoppel—Extinguishment of charge.—An owner of property made a grant therefrom of an annuity, with a proviso that, in case of failure to pay the same, the grantee and her heirs should be entitled to take possession of the property. He subsequently mortgaged the same property, by an instrument which set out that it was his absolutely. After this he paid the annuity till the death of the grantee, whose heir he was. The mortgagees obtained a decree upon their deed, and in execution thereof the property was attached and sold, and the decree-holders obtained possession. The heirs of the mortgagor sued the decree-holders for recovery of possession and for arrears of the annuity, claiming under the terms of the grant. Held that the charge merged and was extinguished, and as the grantor had professed to transfer the property to the mortgagees unincumbered, he was bound to give it over to them free from incumbrance, and it would not lie in his mouth, nor in the mouths of his heirs, to set up the charge against the mortgagees and their vendees. *RADHNY LAL v. 215. ————— Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115.—A decree-holder at a sale in execution of his decree purchased a zamindari share belonging to his judgment-debtors. Afterwards, in execution of a subsequent decree held by another person, the same with other property was again put up for sale. Prior to the sale, the subsequent decree-holder applied to the officer conducting it, stating the fact of the sale and purchase under the previous decree, and requesting that the sale should be confined to a portion of the judgment-debtors' interest which had not been already sold. This application was disallowed, and the whole interest of the judgment-debtors put up for sale, and the prior decree-holder, who was present, made a bid. Ultimately, however, a portion of the property was withdrawn, and the remainder only was sold, including part of the property sold in execution of the prior decree. The prior decree-holder did not bid again. Afterwards the prior decree-holder brought a suit for a declaration that the share which he had purchased at the sale in execution of his decree was not affected by the auction-sale in execution of the subsequent decree. Held that the plaintiff was not estopped from claiming such a declaration by his conduct in bidding at the sale at which the defendant had purchased, inasmuch as it could not be said that by bidding he meant to show that he had no title to the property or had waived his title, or that he had encouraged the defendant to purchase, or had power to forbid the sale. *Ras Seeta Ram v. 217. ————— Effect of sale—Purchaser, Right of.—Where a decree is obtained upon his mortgage by a mortgagee and the mortgaged property is sold under the decree for the purpose of paying off the mortgagee, the interest of both mortgagor and mortgagee passes to the purchaser. The mortgagee is estopped from disputing that such is the effect of the sale, so far as his interest is concerned, although the officer of the Court may only have described the sale as one of the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor. It is not the practice, in the mofussil, to require the mortgagee to convey to the purchaser. The transfer takes place by estoppel. SHREGHINI SHANBHOG v. SALVADOR VAS

218. ————— Prior incumbrancer bidding at auction-sale in execution of decree and not announcing his incumbrance—Sale by first mortgagee in execution of decree upon second mortgage held by him—Interest acquired by purchaser at such sale—Sale of portions of mortgaged property—Mortgagee not compelled to proceed first against unsold portions—Enforcement of mortgage against purchaser not having obtained possession.—At a sale in execution of a decree for enforcement of a hypothecation-bond, the decree-holder, by permission of the executing Court, made bids, but the property was purchased by another. At that time the decree-holder held a prior registered incumbrance which he did not personally announce. In a suit brought by him subsequently to enforce this incumbrance, it was contended on behalf of the auction-purchaser that he was estopped by his conduct from setting it up as against her. Held that there was no estoppel; that under s. 114 of the Evidence Act the Court was entitled to presume that the provisions of s. 287 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code had been complied with, and that consequently the notification of sale disclosed the existence of the incumbrance now sued upon; that the plaintiff was entitled to assume that intending purchasers would read the notification or search the register for the purpose of ascertaining what was the property being sold; and that his rights were not affected by his not having personally announced his incumbrance, nor could it be said that solely by bidding at the sale he had encouraged the purchaser to buy. Mackenzie v. British Linen Co., L. R., 6 App. Ca., 82, and Gheran v. Kunj Behari, J. L. R., 9 All., 413, referred to. Held also that it could not be said that under the circumstances the plaintiff must be taken to have sold in execution of his decree the interest which he held under the bond now in suit; that he could not be compelled to proceed first against those portions of the mortgaged property which had not been sold; and that the bond was enforceable against a purchaser of part of the mortgaged property who had never obtained possession. *BANWARI DAS v. 219. — Sale of mortgaged property in execution of a money-decree without express notice of mortgage—Omission to declare mortgage at time of sale—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 287—Right of mortgagee to enforce mortgage against the property in hands of purchaser.—A mortgagee under a registered mortgage-deed obtained a money-decree against the mortgagor in some matter other than the mortgage, and sold the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. The mortgage lien was not announced in the proclamation of sale as required by s. 287 of Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and the auction-purchaser had no actual knowledge of the mortgage. In a suit brought by the mortgagee against the mortgagor and the auction-purchaser to recover the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property.—Held that the omission to declare the mortgage at the time of the sale could not be treated as an estoppel. *DHONDO BALKRISHNA KANTIKAR v. 220. — Rights of purchasers at sale in execution of a mortgage-decree—Purchase without notice that mortgagor was only benami-holder for the judgment-debtor.—The plaintiffs and defendants, either party holding a separate decree against the same estate, had by leave purchased in execution. Both parties claimed the proprietary right and possession, the defendants holding the latter. The first of the decrees in date was the plaintiffs' for money against the representatives of the deceased owner of the property, which before then had been mortgaged to the defendants by his widow. The plaintiffs obtained only the equity of redemption, their purchase having been of the right, title, and interest. The mortgagees, having got a decree upon their mortgage against the widow, purchased at the sale in execution and defended the possession which they obtained. Held that the defendants, in whose favour the decree had been made upon a bond fide mortgage, without notice that the mortgagor had been only holding benami for her husband, had the better title; that the High Court had rightly disallowed an objection taken by the plaintiffs that this defence, as distinguished from the defendants' answer that the widow was the real owner, had not been set up or decided in the Court of first instance; and held that the owner, having in his lifetime authorized his wife to hold herself out as proprietor in her own right, could not have succeeded in a suit to disentitle the mortgagees without proving that they either had taken the mortgage with such notice or that they had been put upon inquiry; that the same principle applied to these plaintiffs, who had purchased his right, title, and interest; and that they were bound equally with him. *Ramcomar Coondoo v. 221. — Lease by mortgagor to mortgagee—Subsequent sale of equity of redemption by mortgagor—Suit by purchaser to redeem and for possession—Acquiescence.—The purchaser from the mortgagor of the equity of redemption having brought a redemption-suit, the mortgagee contested his right to recover possession on the ground that prior to the purchase, the mortgagor had granted to him (the mortgagee) a mulgeni or permanent lease. Held that the plaintiff was not bound by the lease, although a long period had elapsed since it was granted, it having appeared that the plaintiff had on a former occasion contended that the lease was a forgery and fraudulent; and as the mortgagee was then entitled to possession under his mortgage, no acquiescence in the lease could be inferred from the mere fact of the mortgagee having remained in possession, it not being alleged that rent was ever paid to the plaintiff. SUBRAO MANGESHAYA v. MANJAPA SHETTI . I. L. R., 16 Bom., 705

222. — Suit for sale by mortgagee against auction-purchaser, mortgagee having accepted part of the proceeds of former sale.—On the 10th of February 1873, one S R mortgaged to the plaintiff an undefined one biswa share out of three biswas owned by him. On the 20th of March 1877, J P and G P brought to sale in execution of money-decrees against S R two out of those three biswas, which two biswas were purchased by the defendant. The sale was confirmed on the 23rd of April 1877. Out of the proceeds of that sale, Rs. 1,464-14-9 were appropriated by the plaintiff in part satisfaction of his mortgage. On the 16th of April 1877, the plaintiff sued the auction-purchaser for sale of one biswa in satisfaction of his mortgage. Held that, even if it could be shown (which it could not) that the particular biswa mortgaged to the plaintiff was one of those which had passed into the defendant's possession, the plaintiff was estopped by his previous conduct from suing to bring it to sale under his mortgage. *JAIKA v. 223. — Yeomiah lands—Madras Rent Recovery Act, ss. 3, 9, 79, 80—Unregistered holder rendering service and granting pottahs—Estoppel by acquiescence of person entitled to the yeomiah holding.—A yeomiahdar died leaving a brother who was then out of India. Shortly before his death, he made an invalid assignment of his holding to a third person who performed the service, and granted pottahs of the land. The holding was resumable on failure of the service. The brother of the late yeomiahdar returned after three years and obtained registration of his title. He now filed this suit to enforce acceptance of pottahs tendered by him to the raiyats who had already accepted pottahs from, and executed muchalkas to, the assignee. Held that the suit was not maintainable, as under the circumstances the plaintiff's conduct justified tenant's belief that the assignee was entitled to collect rent from them until the assignment was questioned by the plaintiff and notice of his title given them. KHADAB v. SUBRAMANYA . . . I. L. R., 11 Mad., 12

224. — Mortgaged land subsequently sold by mortgagee in execution of money-decree—Purchaser at such sale without notice of mortgage—Mortgagee stopped from subsequently enforcing his mortgage as against purchaser.—Where a judgment-creditor in execution of a money-decree sells property as belonging to his judgment-debtor, he is afterwards estopped from enforcing, as against the purchaser, a previous mortgage of the property which has been created in his own favour, but of which he has given no notice at the time of the sale, and in ignorance of which the purchaser has bid for the property and paid the full price. This principle applies, even though the mortgage-deed has been registered. AGARCHAND GUMAN CHAND v. BAKHMA HANMANT . . . (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 678)

225. — Assignee of mortgagor—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Right to sue for redemption.—Where the plaintiff in a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage was the original mortgagor, who had by a registered instrument assigned his interest in the mortgaged property to another, and the assignee did not apply to be made a party to the suit, but put forward or consented to have put forward the original mortgagor as the person entitled to redeem.—Held that, as there was nothing in that litigation to show that the defendant-mortgagee was in any way induced to alter his position or to do any act which he would not otherwise have done in consequence of the assignee's conduct, the latter was not estopped by s. 115 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) or by any principle of equitable estoppel from afterwards suing on his own account for redemption. MUHAMMAD SAMI-UN-DIN KHAN v. —Effect of such non-disclosure on mortgagee's rights under his mortgage.—Held that a mortgagee who causes the mortgaged property to be sold in execution of a decree other than a decree obtained upon his mortgage, without notifying to intending purchasers the existence of his mortgage lien, is estopped for ever from setting up that lien against the title of a bona fide purchaser. AGAR CHAND GUMAN CHAND v. 227. — Acts of agent—Authority of agent—Member of Hindu joint family.—A person's agent for the purchase of an estate is not necessarily his agent to re-convey the same. Thus, where one member of an undivided Hindu family, with the authority of his brothers, purchased a share in certain property, and afterwards (without any authority from them) cancelled the sale, received back the consideration-money, and surrendered the kobala.—Held that the brothers were not estopped from suing the parties in possession of the whole property to set aside what the single brother had done, and to obtain possession of the share in question. BRUJONAHUD MITTER v. RADHA CHURN MITTER . . . 7 W. R., 335

228. — Purchase by agent—Setting up character as principal.—Where a man steps in during an auction-sale and assumes the character of a principal agent, and, deposing another who is really acting as agent, purchases the property, he cannot afterwards be allowed, in equity, to turn round and claim to have purchased not for the principal, but for himself, and to obtain a profit out of his purchase. LOKHEN NARAIN ROY CHOWDERY v. 229. — Estoppel by assent to delivery order—Evidence Act, Ch. VIII—Vendor and purchaser.—A contracted to buy from B & Co. 180,000 gunny bags for cash on delivery. Subsequently C agreed with A to advance £15,000 against 87,500 bags. B & Co. gave delivery orders to A, although the goods remained unpaid for. A then endorsed certain of the delivery orders over to C. On these orders the agents of B & Co., at the request of A, wrote the following words: "The bearer of this will personally take delivery of each lot as required." C took delivery of 80,000 bags, but B & Co. refused to deliver to him the remainder on the ground that A had not paid them according to the terms of his contract. Held that, although there had been no actual appropriation of any goods to A, yet as B & Co., by their agents, had consented to the transfer, and had thereby induced C to advance £15,000 on the delivery orders being endorsed and made over to him, it was not now open to them to repudiate the transfer, which they had, through their agent, been the means of confirming. Estoppels in the sense in which that term is used in English legal phraseology are matters of infinite variety, and are by no means confined to the subjects which are dealt with in Ch. VIII of the

230. — Acquiescence of mortgages—Waiver of priority.—When a prior encumbrancer with a full knowledge of his title stands by and through his agency allows the mortgagor to deal with the property as if it was unencumbered,—Held that by such conduct he loses that priority to which the prior date of his encumbrance would have entitled him. RAI SEETA RAM v. KISHUN DASS alias KISHNARAM . 3 Agra, 402

231. — Right of appeal by defendant disclaiming all interest on his own account—Suit for redemption.—S sued to redeem land mortgaged to N, and made P a defendant in the suit on the ground that he was in possession on account of N, his brother. P disclaimed all interest on his own account, and alleged that he was in possession on behalf of N, and that the mortgage was a forgery. N did not appear. The Munsif decreed for the plaintiff. P appealed. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the mortgage was not proved. Held, on second appeal, that P had no locus standi, and could not appeal from the Munsif's decree. SESHAYAR v. PAPPURABADAYANGAR . I. L. R., 6 Mad., 185

232. — Acquiescence—Mortgages executed during plaintiff's minority.—The plaintiff sued the defendant on mortgages executed to the plaintiff by the adoptive mothers of the defendant (who were also defendants) subsequently to his adoption. The plaintiff contended that the mortgages had become effectual as against the defendant by reason of his subsequent conduct. Evidence was given that he had promised his adoptive mothers to redeem the mortgages, and that he had stood by and allowed the plaintiff to carry out the provisions of the mortgage deeds to his own detriment by paying maintenance to the defendant's adoptive mothers and by paying off certain mortgages which had been created by them previously to the adoption of the defendant. Held that knowledge on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff was carrying out the provisions of the mortgage-deeds, and his allowing the plaintiff to do so, did not estop him from disputing them afterwards, for it was no part of his duty to step in and protect the plaintiff against the consequences of his own unauthorized dealings with his property. SHIDDHESHWAR v. CHUND GHOSH MUNDUL v. DOYAMOYEE MUNDUL 9 W. R., 338

234. — Representation as to transfer of property—Suit for rent—Intervenor—Evidence Act, s. 115.—In a suit for rent brought against an ijaradar by a person claiming to be the dar-patnidar of certain property, the defendant resisted the claim upon the ground that another person was the real owner of the dar-patni, and this person was made a co-defendant, and intervened for the purpose of supporting his title to the rent. It appeared that in the year 1259 A purchased the dar-patni estate, and sold it in 1256 to his wife B and son C. Afterwards A successfully resisted a suit for rent brought against him by the present plaintiff as superior landlord on the ground that he had parted with his interest in the estate to B and C. The plaintiff then sued B and C for the rent and obtained a decree, under which the dar-patni was sold to him. He now sued the ijaradar. The intervening defendant contended that A had mortgaged the property to him, and that such proceedings had been taken on the mortgage that he was entitled in the A's right to the rent of the property as the owner of it. Held that the intervening defendant could take no better title than A himself; and that, as A had directly induced the plaintiff to believe that he had sold the property absolutely to B and C and had led him to bring a suit against them for the rent and under the decree obtained in that suit to purchase their interest in the property, the intervening defendant could not set up a claim to the rent in the present suit as against the plaintiff. AUNATH NATH DEN v. 240. ——— Recognition of talukhdari right.—Purchaser at sale for arrears of revenue.—At a sale for arrears of revenue Government purchased a pergunnah, containing a certain talukh belonging to A. The talukh was not cancelled, and the Government made successive temporary settlements with A, in which his talukhdari right was recognized. The right and interest of Government in the pergunnah were afterwards sold to B, who ousted A. A afterwards joined with C in taking a patti lease of the same land which he had in the talukh. Held, in a suit by A against B and C, that this conduct estopped him from recovering possession of the dependent talukh from which he was ousted by B. Assanoolah v. 241. ——— Registration in Collectorate.—Oms probandi.—In a suit to recover possession of certain land and houses, in which the plaintiffs rested their claims on the allegation that when the succession opened out they were seventh in degree, whereas the defendants were eighth in degree, from a common ancestor, and were entitled to no part of the property, it appeared that immediately after the opening out of the succession, the plaintiffs had treated the defendants as having equal rights with themselves and as being in an equal relationship to the common ancestor, and had permitted their names to be registered as such in the Collector's books. Held (affirming the decree of the High Court at Allahabad) that the course of conduct of the plaintiffs, although not amounting to an estoppel in point of law, threw the burden upon them of proving the allegation on which they rested their claim. AGRAWAL SINGH v. On 2nd January 1867, an account was stated and a balance found to be due to the plaintiff consisting of the original deposit and interest at six per cent. per annum. On 11th February 1876, the defendants proposed to pay the plaintiff such balance, together with interest on the original deposit from January 1867 to February 1876, at only 4 per cent. per annum. The plaintiff now claimed the difference between interest at 4 and interest at 6 per cent. Held the defendants were estopped from disputing the plaintiff's demand for interest at the latter rate. MAKUNDI KVAR v. BALKISHEN DAN 1 L. R., 3 All, 326

243. ——— Construction of document making suit premature.—Subsequent contention that suit is barred.—In a suit brought to recover money lent upon a mortgage which the defendant refused to register, the defendant put a construction upon the arrangement which was accepted by the Court, and the claim dismissed as premature. Held that, when the plaintiff sued again in due (i.e., mature) time, it was not open to the parties or to the Court to say that the first construction was wrong. EPATOONWISA v. The defendant had received the pay of the plaintiff, but failed to give it to the plaintiff. Notice of suit was given by the plaintiff under s. 53 of the Madras Police Act, XXIV of 1860. Held that the plaintiff was not estopped by his having given such notice from contending that s. 53 was not applicable to the case. GUNDAM VENKATASAMI v. CHUNNIAM PURUSHOTTAMA . 5 Mad., 460

245. ——— Agreement not to appeal.—Subsequent appeal.—After a plaintiff had obtained a decree and under it, in execution, arrested his judgment-debtor, the latter filed a petition in Court agreeing not to prefer any appeal against the judgment obtained by the plaintiff, and the judgment-creditor at the same time agreed to release the judgment-debtor from arrest and to take payment of the sum decreed to him by instalments. An order was passed by the Court embodying this arrangement. The judgment-debtor, in contravention of this arrangement, preferred an appeal. Held that the judgment-debtor, having induced the decree-holder to believe and having expressly undertaken that he would not prefer an appeal, and having by the representation and undertaking procured his own release from arrest, was estopped from acting contrary to his deliberate representation and undertaking. PROTAP CHUNDER DASS v. 248. — Alienation of service vatan land by the holder of it—Impeachment of such alienation by the alienor—Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 5)—Vatan-dara.—The plaintiff, who was a vatan-dar kulkarni, sued to recover from the defendant possession of certain land with mesne profits, alleging that it was his service vatan land wrongfully taken possession of by the defendant in 1880. The defendant set up a mortgage of the land alleged to have been executed to the defendant by the plaintiff's mother in the plaintiff's name during his minority. Both the lower Courts found that the land was the plaintiff's kulkarni vatan land; that it had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's mother to the defendant for good consideration; and that the mortgage was binding on the plaintiff. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court.—Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that the plaintiff was estopped from denying his title to mortgage the field. The general rule being that the grantor cannot dispute with his grantee his right to alienate the land to him, the circumstances of the case did not justify a departure from the rule. The plaintiff, although an hereditary public officer, was not a trustee for the purposes of the Vatan Act, and it could not be presumed that the grantee knew that the plaintiff's guardian had not obtained the previous sanction of Government to the mortgage. The plaintiff was, therefore, estopped from saying that the grant was forbidden by the Act. NARAYAN KHANDU KULKARNI v. KALGAUNDA BIRDAB PATEL

249. — Payment of a tax for one year without protest—Payment of the tax in a subsequent year under protest—Suit to recover money so paid—Cause of action.—The plaintiff paid a house tax at the rate of Rs 6 for the year 1890 without any protest. When the tax was sought to be levied from the plaintiff at the same rate for the year 1891, he objected to the levy as illegal and excessive, and paid the tax under the protest. He then sued to recover what he alleged was an excess charge of Rs 5 in respect of the tax for 1891. His claim was rejected on the ground that he was estopped from recovering the alleged excess by reason of his having paid the tax for 1890 without protest. Held that the suit was not barred. The levy of a tax in each year gives a new and distinct cause of action, and the payment of the tax without protest for one year does not bar a suit to recover

1. MODE OF DEALING WITH EVIDENCE.

1. ——— Discussion of mode of dealing with.—The mode in which evidence is to be dealt with discussed. MATHURA PANDAY v. RAM RUCHA TEWARI. 3 B. L. R., A. C., 106; 11 W. R., 482

[3 B. L. R., A. C., 382

2. ——— Conflicting evidence, Investigation of cases of.—There is no safer rule for investigating cases of conflicting evidence, where perjury and fraud must exist on the one side or the other, than to consider what facts are beyond dispute, and to examine which of the two cases best accords with those facts according to the ordinary course of human affairs and the usual habits of life. USCDOOLAH v. IMAMAN

[5 W. R., P. C., 26; 1 Moore's I. A., 19

3. ——— Native testimony—Suspicion of perjury.—Evidence should receive its due weight, and not be rejected from a general distrust of native testimony, nor perjury widely imputed without some grave grounds to support the imputation. RAMAMANI AMMAL v. KULANTHAI NAUCHEAR

[17 W. R., 1; 14 Moore's I. A., 346

6. ——— Judgment on facts—Probabilities of the case—Rule of Privy Council.—Where a Judge, whose judgments have been observed to be very careful, comes to a conclusion on the weight of evidence as to a pure question of fact, the High Court would do wrong not to follow the principle laid down by the Privy Council, not to interfere in a judgment on facts, unless the conclusion be clearly shown to be a mistaken one. In this country, where native evidence, as a general rule, is fallible, it would be safe and proper to follow another principle laid down by the Privy Council, namely, to look to the probabilities of the case. EDUN v. BECHUN

[11 W. R., 345]

7. ——— Sufficiency of evidence—Evidence which might have been, but was not, adduced, as being unnecessary.—Where there is sufficient evidence of a fact, it is no objection to the proof of it that more evidence might have been adduced. RAMALINGA PILLAI v. SADASIYA PILLAI

[1 W. R., P. C., 25; 9 Moore's I. A., 506]

8. ——— Consent to decision on such evidence as there is.—Even if the evidence upon the record is in itself insufficient, a Judge may properly decide the case upon that evidence, if the defendant consents to its being taken as sufficient. SHEETUL PERSHAD MITTER v. JUMMEJOX MULLICK

10. ——— Questions of evidence.—Questions as to the admissibility of evidence should be decided as they arise, and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given. JADU RAI v. BHUBOTARAN NUNDY I. L. R., 17 Cal., 178

13. ——— Production of false document—Duty of Court.—The production in evidence of a forged document by a party to a suit does not relieve the Court from the duty of examining the whole evidence adduced on both sides, and of deciding the case according to the truth of the matters in issue. *SURNOMONER v. 15. ——— Possession of title-deeds—Absence of proof of acquisition of possession.—The mere fact of possession of title-deeds without any very satisfactory proof of the mode by which possession of them was acquired was held by the Privy Council to be outweighed by the other adverse circumstances of the case. *KRIPAMOYEE DEBIA v. therefore not reliable, the High Court, in remanding the case, held that this was a most improper mode of treating the evidence. On appeal by some of the defendants, the Judges of the Sudder Dewauny Adalat of Agra held that the fact of plunder was not proved, and dismissed the suit as against all the defendants. Held by the Privy Council that, as the defendants did not come forward to exculpate themselves by their own evidence, and as the evidence in support of the charge was unopposed, the decree of the Court of first instance could not be set aside. GANESH SINGH v. nor at the dictation of a person who had a personal knowledge of the truth of the facts stated, if regularly kept in course of business, are admissible as evidence under s. 34 of the Evidence Act I of 1872 and semble under s. 32, cl. 2. Account books, though not proved to have been regularly kept in course of business, but proved to have been kept on behalf of a firm of contractors by its servant or agent appointed for that purpose, are relevant as admissions against the firm. QUEEN v. HAKMANTA
[I. L. R., 1 Bom., 610]

23. — Evidence Act, s. 145—Statement.—A was employed by B at intervals of a week or fortnight to write up B's account books, B furnishing him with the necessary information either orally or from loose memoranda. Held that the entries so made could not be given in evidence to contradict A, under s. 145 of the Evidence Act, as to previous statements made by him in writing. The statements were really made, not by A, but by B, under whose instructions A had written them. MUNCHERSHAW BEZONJI v. NEW DHURUMSHY SPINNING AND WEAVING COMPANY

[I. L. R., 4 Bom., 576]

24. — Absence of entry in a book irrelevant—Evidence Act I of 1872, s. 34.—Though under s. 34 of the Evidence Act the actual entries in books of account regularly kept in the course of business are relevant to the extent provided by the section, such a book is not by itself relevant to raise an inference from the absence of any entry relating to a particular matter. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GRISH CHUNDER BANERJEE

25. — Where a Judge considered it inequitable to reject plaintiff's books when they made for him, viz., as to amounts lent to defendant, and to accept them when they were against his interest, viz., in the amount of repayments credited to defendant, and therefore disregarded both descriptions of entries equally, but gave a decree in plaintiff's favour for such entries as were proved, without deducting the items credited to defendant.—Held that entries in an account book, whether on the credit or debit side of the account, are not conclusive evidence either of amounts paid or of sums actually due which the Judge is bound to believe. The Judge was bound to look at the whole of the entries in the plaintiff's book, to give credit to such of them as he believed to be true, and to discredit those, if any, which he believed to be false. ISAN CHANDRA SINGH v. 26. — Entry against interest of witness.—In a suit for account by the representatives of A, deceased, a document was offered as evidence purporting to be a copy made by deceased of an account furnished him by the defendant containing an entry of a payment of Rs. 5,000 by the deceased to the defendant, and the purchase therewith by the defendant of Company's paper for the deceased.

Held that by itself the document was inadmissible. But when further evidence was given by a witness that the deceased had stated to him that the document was a correct statement of his account with the defendant,—Held that such evidence was admissible; and that, with the addition of this evidence, the document also was admissible as containing an entry by the deceased against his interest. But quære whether the circumstance that the entry only indicated a conversion of the money into a new shape did not take away the character of its being an entry against interest. ZAYNUD v. 28. ————— Disputed items of account. Proof of.—In an action by a banking firm against another firm to recover a balance upon an account between them, the plaintiff put in evidence the account books of his firm, and the Inspector of the Court certified that the books were regularly kept, consistently with the rules of banking, and that they agreed with the account rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant. The plaintiff, however, examined no witness to prove that the books were regularly kept or the general accuracy of the particular charges constituting the demand: he proved admissions by the defendant of the correctness of the account, and of an award in his favour of one of the disputed items. The defendant in his defence did not deny the accuracy of the plaintiff's account or of the books put in evidence, but objected to two items of the account, and claimed a set-off, but examined no witnesses to rebut the plaintiff's case. Held (reversing the Sudder Court's decree) that, although the plaintiff's books and the Inspector's report were not conclusive evidence, yet that the necessity of strict proof was removed by the admission of the defendant, and the fact of the absence by him of any evidence to impeach the accuracy of the accounts, the disputed items being satisfactorily accounted for. DWARKA DASS v. JANKEN DOSS. 6 Moore's L. A., 88

29. ————— Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 34—Evidence as to whether hundis are genuine or not—Comparison of handwriting—Entries in account books regularly kept—Tests of correctness of such books—Interest on decrees.—The High Court had reversed the finding of the first Court on an issue which, in effect, was whether certain hundis were genuine or false. Under s. 34 of Act I of 1872 (The Indian Evidence Act), the plaintiff's account books were produced by the plaintiff as relevant evidence, and were relied on as corroborating direct testimony. The books were tested by reference to entries corresponding with other independent evidence. The Judicial Committee, on the whole evidence, affirmed the decision of the High

30. ————— Corroborative evidence necessary to render defendant liable upon entries in plaintiff's books—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 34.—In a suit to recover money due upon a running account, the plaintiffs produced their account books, which were found to be books regularly kept in the course of business, in support of their claim. One of the plaintiffs gave evidence as to the entries in the account books, but in such a manner that it was not clear whether he spoke from his personal knowledge of the transaction entered in the books, the entries in which were largely in his own hand-writing, or simply as one describing the state of affairs that was shown by the books. He was cross-examined, but no questions were asked him to show that he was not speaking as to his personal knowledge. Held that the evidence given as above should be interpreted in the manner most favourable to the plaintiffs, and might be accepted in support of the entries in the plaintiffs' account books, which by themselves would not have been sufficient to charge the defendants with liability. DWARKA DASS v. SANT BAKSH. I. L. R., 18 All., 92

31. ————— Admissibility of books of account containing entries after transaction—Corroborative evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 34.—By s. 34 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, the admissibility of books of account regularly kept in the course of business is not restricted to books in which entries have been made from day to day, or from hour to hour, as transactions have taken place. The time of making the entries may affect the value of them, but should not, if they have been made regularly in the course of business afterwards, make them irrelevant. The course of business in keeping the accounts in the office of a talukhdari estate was that monthly accounts were submitted by karindas at the head office, where they were abstracted and entered in an account book under the date of entry, that being in some cases many days after the transaction of payment or receipt; but the entries were made in their proper order, on the authority of the officer whose duty it was to receive or pay the money. Held that the entry in the account book was admissible as corroborative evidence of oral testimony to the fact of a payment for what it was worth, objection being only to be made to its weight, not to its relevance under s. 34. The opinion expressed in the judgment in Munchershaw Bezant v. New Dhurumsey Spinning and Weaving Co., I. L. R., 4 Bom., 576, against the reception of an account book containing an entry not made at the time of the transaction was not approved. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF BARA BARI v. RAM PARSHAD. I. L. 35. — Accounts—Evidence of reputation as to ownership of property—Suit to recover forest tracts from Government.—In a suit by a zamindar to recover certain forest tracts from Government, the plaintiff relied on certain accounts called Ayakut accounts as furnishing proof of the inclusion of the said tracts within the limits of his zamindari. The District Judge refused to accept these accounts as evidence of reputation, because no evidence was produced to show for what purpose, by whom, and in what circumstances, these accounts were prepared, and what guarantee existed to ensure their accuracy. Held that, inasmuch as they were from time to time prepared for administrative purposes by village officers and were produced from proper custody and otherwise sufficiently proved to be genuine, they were admissible as evidence of reputation. No distinction can be drawn between evidence of reputation to establish and to disprove a public right. SIVA SUBRAMANIAM v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

They now claimed against B & Co. for money alleged to have been so sent after giving credit for sums received. The proof was the arrival of the money at A & Co.'s places of business supported by entries in A & Co.'s books at each place, but there was no proof of payment to the agents save such entries. As to remittances to the other places, the only evidence was the books of A & Co. at the place of despatch. Held that there was no evidence as to the latter claims; and as to the former, although the evidence appeared insufficient, the case would not be remanded, as the appellant, independent of these claims, had a balance against them. SETH LAKSHMI CHAND v. being at most corroborative evidence, the mere general statement of the banker to the effect that his books were correctly kept is not sufficient to discharge the burden of proof that lies upon him; particularly if he has the means of producing much better evidence. In a suit to recover moneys unaccounted for, where defendants plead payments endorsed on documents, and the endorsements purport to have been signed by the plaintiffs, the formal and regular method of proof is to call on the plaintiffs to admit or deny their signatures, and then to call upon witnesses to state whether they saw the plaintiffs sign or could speak to the handwriting or generally what took place. GUNGA PERSHAD v. 38. — Bankers' account books—Suit against representatives of customer for balance of account.—In an action by bankers against the representatives of a deceased customer to recover a balance of an account alleged to be due to the plaintiff by the deceased at the time of his death, the production of the bankers' books, with the entries of the items constituting the demand, kept according to the established custom of mahajans in India, is not of itself sufficient evidence to establish such a claim, strict proof of the debt being required. RAI SRI KISHEN v. RAI HURI KISHEN

[5 Moore's L. A., 482

39. — Suit for balance of unadjusted account.—In a suit for a sum of money on an unadjusted account, plaintiff filed a memorandum (A) with her plaint, from which the amount claimed in the plaint could not be made out. In her examination by the Court the plaintiff put in another memorandum (C) to explain memorandum (A). Defendant admitted that memorandum (C) was signed by him. It had reference to a period immediately preceding that for which the suit was brought. Held that memorandum (C) was rather evidence to support the originally stated cause of action, than an amendment of the claim or the substitution of one claim or cause of action for another. The case was one which should have been decided not merely on the discrepancy between the two statements made by plaintiff, but on the whole of the evidence. The mere omission of an accountable party, framing his own account, to carry forward into a new account a balance against himself existing in a former one can constitute no evidence in his own favour. To prove the existence of the balance, such omission might be considered in conjunction with other evidence in the case. MULKA MUKHDEA v. TEKARTH ROY

In a suit by B against A in Calcutta for the balance due to him on account of the money so advanced after giving credit to A for the amount realized by the sale of the goods according to the account-sale,—Held that the account-sale was prima facie conclusive of the amount realized; and if A wished to falsify the account, the onus lay upon him. DOONMUN v. such decree. Neither a recital in the decree of the rate of rent alleged by the plaintiff nor a declaration in it as to the rate of rent which the Court considers to have been proved would operate in such a case so as to make that matter a res judicata, assuming that no such declaration were asked for in the plaint as part of the substantive relief claimed, the defendant having a proper opportunity of meeting the case. MODHUSUDUN SHAHA MUNDUL v. 74. — Evidence of amount of rent.—An ex-parte decree is not conclusive evidence of the amount of rent payable by the same defendant in another suit for subsequent rent of the same property. Where the plaintiff sued the defendant for a year's rent at the same rate which had been decreed to him for a previous year in a suit which he had brought against the same defendant for rent of the same property, and relied upon the former decree, which had been obtained ex-parte, and which he also alleged had been duly executed, as evidence of the amount of rent due to him by the defendant, but it appeared that the lower Court had found that the alleged execution-proceedings were fraudulent, and that no steps had been taken which gave finality to the decree.—Held that the decree was not conclusive evidence of the amount of rent due from the defendant or of the questions, with which it dealt. Birchander Manickya v. 82. ———— Suit by the purchaser at execution-sale to recover the purchase-money.—The plaintiff purchased land sold in execution of a decree in favour of the defendant, but was subsequently evicted by the son of the judgment-debtor; he now sued in 1889 to recover the purchase-money paid by him on the ground that the judgment-debtor possessed no saleable interest in the property in question. It appeared that the son of the judgment-debtor had obtained a decree in 1888 against the plaintiff and others declaring that she (the judgment-debtor) had no saleable interest in the property, and that in that suit the present defendant had given evidence in support of the present plaintiff's contention; the judgment in that suit was now admitted in evidence against the defendant. Held that the judgment in the former suit was not evidence against the defendant, he not having been a party to it; and that the suit should be dismissed on the ground that there was no legal evidence that the judgment-debtor, whose interest in the land had been purchased by the plaintiff, possessed no legal interest therein. NILAKANTA v. IMAMSABIB, I. L. R., 16 Mad., 361

83. ———— Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 8, 9, 13, 40, 48—Admissibility in evidence of judgments not inter partes—Judgment in criminal case.—P brought a suit against K, a Hindu widow, to establish his right of inheritance in certain villages which had belonged to K's husband, and to have it declared that her husband died childless, and that K had falsely put forward a child of unknown parentage as her husband's son. K was the only defendant, and she maintained that the child in question was her son by her deceased husband. The suit was dismissed on the merits by the Court of first instance, and by the High Court on appeal. After K's death, P brought a suit against D, whom the Collector, as manager of the Court of Wards, had accepted as the minor son of K, and against the Collector as such manager, for possession of the same villages upon the same grounds as those put forward in the former suit. Held by the Full Bench that the judgments of the Court of first instance and the High Court in the former suit did not operate as res judicata in the present suit, but (BRONHURST, J., dissenting on this point) that they were admissible in evidence in the present suit. Per EDGE, C.J., and TYRELL, J.—The judgments were not admissible under s. 8 or s. 9 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), nor was either of them a "transaction" or a "fact" within the meaning of s. 13. But the record, and not the judgments alone, in the former suit, was admissible, under s. 13 (b) independently of s. 48, as evidence of a particular instance in which the alleged right of the plaintiff to the property now in suit was at that time claimed and disputed, the word "right" in both cl. (a) and (b) of s. 13 including a right of ownership, and not being confined, as held by the majority in Gujju Lal v. Fattah Lal, I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, to incorporeal rights. But the reasons

given in the judgments in the former suit for the decree could not be considered in the present suit. Per STRAIGHT, J.—Under s. 43 of the Evidence Act, the question was whether the existence of the former judgments was a fact in issue or relevant under some other provision of the Act. Here the question was not as to the existence of the former judgments and decrees as a fact in issue or relevant fact; but though s. 43 declared judgments, orders, and decrees other than those mentioned in ss. 40, 41, and 42 irrelevant and judgments, orders, and decrees, it did not make them absolutely inadmissible when they were the best evidence of something that might be proved aliunde. The former judgments and decrees were not themselves a "transaction" or "instances" within the meaning of s. 13; but the suit in which they were made was a transaction or an instance in which the defendant's right as the living son of K's husband to obtain proprietary possession of his father's estate was claimed and recognized, and to establish that such a transaction or instance took place, they were the best evidence. Per BRONHURST, J.—That for the reasons given by GARTH, C.J., and JACKSON and PONTIFEX, JJ., in Gujju Lal v. Fattah Lal, I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, the judgments in the former suit were not admissible in evidence. Per MAHMOOD, J.—That for the reasons given in the dissentient judgment of MITTER, J., in Gujju Lal v. Fattah Lal, I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, the former judgments were admissible in evidence. It having been alleged that the defendant was in reality one R, the defence attempted to use as evidence a judgment in a criminal case in which the defendant was prosecuted as R for causing simple hurt, and in which the Court had found that R had died some time before the date of the alleged offence, and expressed an opinion that the present plaintiff (who was not the prosecutor) had got up the case.—Held by EDGE, C.J., and BRONHURST and TYRELL, JJ., that the judgment of the Criminal Court was not admissible in evidence. Held by STRAIGHT, J., with doubt, and on the principle that in cases of doubt a Judge should decide in favour of admissibility, rather than of non-admissibility, that the judgment was a fact which went to establish the identity of the defendant with the person he alleged himself to be, or at any rate to show that he was not the person the plaintiff said he was, and that it was therefore admissible under s. 9 of the Evidence Act. Held by MAHMOOD, J., that the judgment was admissible under s. 8, and, if not, under other sections of the Evidence Act. *COLLECTOR OF GORAKHPUR v. 85. ————— Evidence to explain inconsistency.—Held that the Subordinate Judge was quite justified in using a decree between other parties to explain an apparent inconsistency between certain statements in the plaint and in the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses, on the ground of which inconsistency the Munsif had rejected that evidence. RADHANATH DASS v. KHELUT CHUNDER GHOSH 17 W. R., 558

86. ————— Ownership of property.—In a suit to have it declared that a certain house was the property of W, plaintiff's judgment-debtor, defendants contended that it had been the property of another person, and that they had purchased it in execution of a decree against that person. The lower Appellate Court found for the defendants on the basis of a decree dismissing a suit by W's representatives to have the property declared to be W's. Held that the decree could not bind the plaintiffs who were not parties to it. GOLUCKMONEE DEBIA v. RAMMONEE BOSE 12 W. R., 21

87. ————— Evidence of possession.—Admissibility in evidence of decree in former suit.—The plaintiffs, as purchasers of a share of an estate, sued to recover their share of the rent of certain tenures held in that estate by the defendants. The defendants denied being in possession as alleged. Another co-sharer in the same estate had previously brought a suit against the same defendants for the rent of the tenures, and in that suit the present plaintiffs and other co-sharers of the estate were made co-defendants, and the decision in that suit was that the present defendants were in possession and were liable to pay to the then plaintiff his share of the rent. Held (MITTAL, J., dissenting) that the decree in the former suit was not admissible as evidence in the present suit. SURENDER NATH PAL CHOWDHRY v. BROJO NATH PAL CHOWDHRY [I. L. 88. ————— Decree in former suit showing lands were mal.—Suit by auction-purchaser for rent.—Evidence Act, s. 11.—Where the plaintiff, who was an auction-purchaser of a share in certain lands, sued for arrears of rent against the owners of another share in the same, it was admitted that certain plots of the estate were held in exclusive possession. The defendants claimed these plots as lakhiraj. The plaintiff put in evidence certain decrees in respect of such plots in which it was held, against the persons in possession at the time, that the lands were mal. Held that, having regard to the circumstances and the particular defence set up, that the decrees were admissible in evidence, not as showing that the lands were mal or lakhiraj, but as showing that rent had been successfully claimed in respect of the lands. HIRA LAL PAL v. 90. ————— Rent suit.—Decree obtained ex-parte against registered tenant.—In a suit for rent the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to payment both in cash and kind, and, in order to show that he was entitled to recover rent in kind, tendered two ex-parte decrees obtained by his predecessor against the persons registered as tenants of the tenure at the time the decrees were obtained, such decrees being for rent both in cash and kind. It appeared that the defendant was the owner of the tenure at the time the two decrees were passed, having acquired the tenure by foreclosure, although he had not registered the transfer in the plaintiff's books, and that he was not made a party to the suits in which the decrees were passed. Held that, as the defendant was not a party to the suits in which the decrees were obtained, and did not claim through the parties against whom they were passed, they were not admissible in the suit as evidence against him. The decision in Sham Chand Koondoo v. Broj Nath Pal Chowdhry, 12 B. L. R., 484; 21 W. R., 94, does not lay down that a decree against a registered tenant is to be evidence for ever in future proceedings against an unregistered transferee not a party to it; but all that case decides is, that for the purpose of satisfying that particular decree an unregistered transferee is bound by it, whether he was a party to the suit or not, the tenure being liable for the rent. RAM NABAIN RAI v. 91. ————— Evidence of adoption.—In a former bond fide litigation to which the defendant was not party, the status of the plaintiff as an adopted son was in issue and disposed of in his favour. 92. ————— Evidence of adoption.—A decree to which the defendant was not a party is admissible as evidence of great weight, though not as an estoppel against him, on the question of the plaintiff's adoption, which was established by it in the presence of certain members of the plaintiff's family who were interested in contesting its validity. ANUNDNATH ROY v. 93. ————— Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35.—Judgments and private documents.—In a suit for partition of family property, it became necessary for the plaintiff to prove that his grandfather had been adopted by A, and he tendered in evidence judgments from which it appeared that A's brother, who was the grandfather of defendant No. 1, had sued to recover moneys due to A, alleging that the adopted son was an infant living under his protection. An adoption of the father of the defendant No. 1 by D was also put in issue, and to prove it, defendant No. 1 tendered in evidence decrees in which the alleged adopted son was so described and also other documents (to which neither defendant No. 5, who denied the adoption, nor his father was a party) where the same description was used. Held that the documents tendered in evidence of the two adoptions above mentioned, respectively, were admissible in evidence. KRISHNASAMI ATTANGAR v. RAJAGOPALA ATTANGAR. I. L. R., 16 Mad., 78

94. — Former suit on same matter between different parties—Decision on public right.—In a suit by the trustees of certain pagodas for the recovery of six villages on behalf of the pagodas from the defendant, the manager of the pagoda, — Held that the judgment in another suit—in which the cousin of a former manager sued him for a partition of certain villages, some of which were included in this suit, and in which it was decided that the manager was manager and not owner—was a decision upon a question of public right, and was receivable against the defendant. KINDERSLEY, J., agreed generally, but doubted whether the judgment in the other suit was upon a matter of such general interest as to be good evidence against a stranger. NALLATHAMBI BATTAR v. NILLAKUMARA PILLAI [7 Mad., 306

95. — Evidence Act, ss. 13, 43.—In a suit to establish an itnams right to certain lands, the plaintiff produced certain transcript decisions of the Civil Court in suits in which a former holder of the tenure of the person who was said to have created the right was a party, but the lower Appellate Court rejected them as evidence, on the ground that the defendant was not a party to the suits. Held that the proceedings in such suits came within the meaning of "any transactions" in the Evidence Act, 1872, s. 13, and were admissible as evidence in the case under s. 43, not as conclusive, but as of such weight as the Court might think they ought to have. NEAMUT ALI v. GOOROO DOSS. 23 W. R., 366

OMER DUTT JHA v. BURN. 24 W. R., 470

96. — Evidence Act, ss. 13, 43—Relevancy of judgments in suits in which right was asserted to collect dues for a temple.—In a suit brought by the trustees of a temple to recover from the owners of certain lands in certain villages money claimed under an alleged right as due to the temple, — Held that judgments in other suits against other persons in which claims under the same right had been decreed in favour of the trustees of the temple were relevant under s. 13 of the Evidence Act, as being evidence of instances in which the right claimed had been asserted. Held also that the said judgments were relevant under s. 43 of the said Act as relating to matters of a public nature. RAMASAMI v. APPAYU. I. L. R., 12 Mad., 6

according to a compromise, of which the judgment set out the terms in the form of a recital, — Held that the judgment, though not in the ordinary form of a decree, was the record of a transaction by which the rights of the parties were recognized, and was therefore relevant as evidence under the provisions of Act I of 1872, s. 13. ROOF CHAND BEKUT v. HUR KISHEN DASS [23 W. R., 162

98. — Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Title-deeds—Petition of plaintiff's predecessor asserting title—Judgment obtained by plaintiff's predecessor recognizing title.—In a suit to establish the plaintiff's title to certain land, he put in evidence (1) a conveyance in favour of his father; (2) a sale-certificate issued to his father's vendor; (3) an order made in certain execution-proceedings in which was recited a petition by his father asserting his title; (4) a judgment obtained by his father in which his title was recognized. Neither the defendants nor their predecessors were parties to any of these instruments or proceedings. Held that all these documents were relevant and admissible in evidence. VENKATASAMI v. VENKATREDDI

99. — Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 13—Document executed by other tenants—Suit for ejectment.—In a suit for possession of land, the plaintiffs claimed title under a lease from the shrotriendars of the village where the land was situated. The defendants, who had obstructed the plaintiffs from taking possession of part of the land, claimed to have permanent occupancy rights, and asserted that the shrotriendars were entitled not to the land itself, but to melvaram only. To meet this allegation, the plaintiffs tendered in evidence documents executed by other tenants in the same village showing that they were purakndis merely. The defendants had received no notice to quit before suit. Held that the documents above referred to were admissible under Evidence Act, s. 13. VYTHILINGA v. VENKATACHALA. I. L. R., 16 Mad., 194

100. — Decision as to boundaries of land.—Where the boundaries of a piece of land, as given respectively in a sale-certificate and in a plaint, serve to identify it as the land in respect of which a former decision has been passed, then, although the present holders of the land may not be the legal representatives of the persons who were bound by the former decision, yet the decision is entitled under s. 13, Evidence Act, to consideration as evidence in support of the plaint. ANUND CHUNDER CHUND v. GUNES GAZER. 25 W. R., 180

101. — Road-cess papers—Deed of sale—Evidence Act, s. 13.—Under the Evidence Act, s. 13, road cess papers and a deed of sale are evidence quantum valent. So is a decree, although the party against whom it is treated as evidence was no party to it. DAITARI MOHANTI v. JUGO BUDHMOO MOHANTI. 23 W. R., 293 determining the right to the office of audhikari of the Difu Sastur at Nowpoung, where defendant claimed to be audhikari and alleged the headship was elsewhere, previous judgments or decrees involving instances in which the right and custom in question had been successfully asserted were held admissible in evidence under the provisions of Act I of 1872, s. 13. KOONDO NATH SUBMA GOSWAMI v. DHIRE CHUNDER SURMA ODHIKAR GOSWAMI . . . 20 W. R., 245

103. Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 13—Custom—Admissibility in evidence of judgments not “inter partes.”—In a suit for rent the amount of the land held by the defendant was questioned, and it was contended that the land must be measured with a hath of 21½ inches and not one of 18 inches, as claimed by the plaintiff zamindar. Certain decrees obtained by the zamindar against other tenants in the same pergunnah in suits in which 18 inches had been taken as the hath were tendered in evidence in support of the plaintiff's contention that the customary hath in the pergunnah was one of 18 inches. Held that such decrees were admissible in evidence under the provisions of s. 13 of the Evidence Act, as they furnished evidence of particular instances in which a custom was claimed. JIANUTULLAH SIBDAN v. ROMONI KANT ROY. PIR BUKSH MUNDUL v. ROMONI KANT ROY I. L. R., 15 Cal., 233

104. Decrees of competent Courts—Evidence of custom—Matter of public interest.—The decrees of competent Courts are good evidence in matters of public interest, such as the existence of customs of succession in particular communities. Such decisions form an exception to the general rule, which excludes res inter alios acta. BAI BAJI v. BAI SANTOK . I. L. R., 20 Bom., 53

105. Decision not inter partes—Suit for confirmation of title and for sale.—Plaintiff, as representing decree-holder, sued for confirmation of title and for sale of the property in execution. Defendant's case was that he was purchaser for valuable consideration from the original judgment-debtor. The lower Appellate Court set aside this plea on the ground that the High Court had declared in special appeal, in a previous litigation between defendant and another party, that the purchase in question was spurious, null, and void. Held that the decision of the High Court, though not binding and final evidence against the defendant in this suit, was sufficient to give plaintiff a prima facie case which, by the rules of pleading, it was for defendant to rebut. ABDOOL KAREEM v. SUFFER ALLY . . . 11 W. R., 118

106. Judgments not inter partes—Suit for possession—Evidence of character of possession.—In a suit for possession of land, the defendant, in order to show the character of his possession, offered in evidence a judgment obtained by him in a suit to which the plaintiff or his predecessors in title were not parties. Held that the judgment was admissible in evidence. PRABI MORUN MURFJI v. DEBOMOTI DANA . I. L. R., 11 Cal., 745

107. Liability of land for rent.—In a suit for khas possession of land upon the allegation that the defendant refused to give up possession or to pay rent for it, a decree declaring that the land in suit was liable for rent was tendered in evidence. The decree had been obtained by an auction-purchaser against the defendants, but the plaintiff did not claim title through the auction-purchaser who had in fact been treated as a trespasser and ejected. Held that the ruling in the case of Gujju Lal v. Fattah Lal, I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, governed the case, and that the decree was inadmissible in evidence. Although the case of Hira Lal Pal v. Hills, 11 C. L. R., 528, inter partes may be received in evidence, it does not lay down that such judgments can be treated as conclusive evidence of the facts with which they deal. MORUNDRA LAL KHAN v. ROMONOTI DANI . I. L. R., 12 Cal., 207

108. Evidence Act, ss. 11, 13, and 40—Admissibility of such judgment.—The plaintiff sued to recover arrears of rent for a certain shop, alleging the annual rent to be Rs250. The defendant contended that it was only Rs60. The defendant and the plaintiff's brother were partners in business, and the plaintiff relied upon the evidence of his brother and on two entries in the firm's books in the writing of his brother. To prove the bona fides of the entries, the plaintiff tendered in evidence a judgment passed against the defendant in a suit brought by the defendant against the plaintiff's brother, charging him with having improperly debited their firm with Rs250 as the rent of the shop. Held that the judgment was not admissible as evidence against the defendant in the present suit. Naranji Bhikabhai v. Dipa Umed, I. L. R., 8 Bom., 3, distinguished. RANCHMODAS KRISHNADAS v. BAPU NARRAY . . . I. L. R., 10 Bom., 439

109. Subjects of public nature—Proof of custom of pre-emption.—Held that in subjects of a public nature, such as to prove custom of pre-emption, etc., previous judgments between other parties are admissible as evidence, but must not be regarded as conclusive evidence. TOTA RAM v. MORUN LALL . . . 2 Agra, 120

110. Suit for pre-emption—Evidence of custom—Decrees enforcing right.—In suit for pre-emption based on custom, evidence of decrees passed in favour of such a custom, in suits in which it was alleged and denied, is admissible evidence to prove its existence. The most satisfactory evidence of an enforcement of a custom is a final decree based on the custom. Gujju Lal v. Fattah Lal, I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, distinguished. Koodoottoollah v. Mohimee Mohun Shaha, 5 Rev. Cir. and Cr. Rep., 290, Sheo Churn v. Goodar, 3 Agra, 138, and Lachman Rai v. Akbar Khan, I. L. R., 1 All., 440, referred to. GURDAYAL MAL v. JHANDU MAL . . . I. L. R., 10 All., 585

111. Evidence of custom.—A co-owner of village lands sued in 1861 to have them divided among the villagers according to a custom that at the expiration of every twelve years the lands should be re-distributed by lot among the co-owners, and to have two of the shares delivered to him as one of the co-owners. In 1851 another co-owner had, in a suit to which only some of the present defendants were parties, obtained a decree for the periodical allotment of the lands; and in 1853 such decree, which clearly recognized the existence and validity of the custom, was affirmed on appeal. Held that, though the decree of 1851 was only a judgment inter partes, it was, as against such of the present defendants as were not parties to the former suit, cogent evidence of the existence and validity of the custom. VENKATASWAMI NAYAKHAN v. SUBBA RAO. SANKARA SUBRAIYAN v. SUBBA RAO. 2 Mad., 1

112. — Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11 and 12—Admissibility in evidence of judgment in former case, the subject-matter of the former suit not being identical with that of the latter suit.—The rule laid down in the cases of Gujya Lall v. Fattah Lall, I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, and of Sunder Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry, I. L. R., 18 Cal., 852, has been materially qualified by the decisions of the Privy Council in the cases of Ram Ranjan Chakraborty v. Ram Narain Singh, I. L. R., 22 Cal., 538; L. R., 22 I. A., 60, and Bitto Kumar v. Kashi Pershad, L. R., 24 I. A., 10. Under certain circumstances, in certain cases, the judgment in a previous suit, to which one of the parties in the subsequent suit was not a party, may be admissible in evidence for certain purposes and with certain objects in the subsequent suit. In a case where the previous suit was to recover a two-thirds share of the property in question, and the subsequent suit was by a different plaintiff to recover the remaining one-third share of the same property, Held in the subsequent suit the judgment in the previous suit was not admissible in evidence, the subject-matter in the two suits not being identical. TITU KHAN v. RAJANI MORUN DAS

113. — Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 13 and 43—Judgments not inter partes—Admissibility of such judgments.—Judgments not inter partes, though not conclusive as res judicata, are admissible in evidence under s. 13 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) to show the conduct of the parties, or particular instances of the exercise of a right, or admissions made by the parties or their predecessors in title, or to identify property, or to show how it has been previously dealt with. A, B, and C were members of a joint Hindu family, each having a third share in the family estate. A assigned his interest in the joint estate to the plaintiff, who in 1897 filed this suit to recover by partition their one-third share in the property. B and C pleaded inter alia that A had already relinquished his share in their favour by a release dated 7th August 1885. The plaintiff relied upon the judgments in a former suit brought by certain creditors of A to establish A's title to a third share in the property. In that suit it had been decided that the release relied upon by B and C was a fraudulent and colourable transaction. Held that the judgments in the former litigation, though not inter partes, were admissible under s. 13 of the Evidence Act. LAKSHMAN GOVIND v. AMRIT GOPAL. I. L. R., 24 Bom., 591

114. — Proceedings not inter partes—Evidence of possession.—In a suit for possession, where plaintiff put in a copy of a soleh-namah to which defendant was not a party, Held that, although no question of right or title could be decided adversely to the defendant on the basis of that agreement, yet it would be evidence that by an order of Court passed on that solehnamah the plaintiff was put in possession. SREENUTTY DASER v. PEELARAM DASSEN. 15 W. R., 261

115. — Admissibility of proceedings between defaulting proprietor and third parties in suit by auction-purchaser at sale for arrears of revenue.—An auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue does not derive his title from the defaulting proprietor, and proceedings between the defaulting proprietor and third parties with respect to the title to the land are not admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit brought by the auction-purchaser as against him. RADHA GORINDO KORN v. RAHMAT DASS MOOKERJEE. (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 82)

116. — Roobookari—Evidence Act, s. 13.—A roobookari Court proceeding in a case in which certain decree-holders sought to attach the mokurrari rights of an ancestor of the defendants in this jaghir was held to be relevant evidence under the Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 13. LUCI MEERDHUR PATTUCK v. RUGHOOBUR SINGH. 24 W. R., 284

5. HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

117. — Evidence in cases of pedigree, death, and marriage.—Hearsay evidence, though to be received with caution, is not inadmissible in questions of pedigree, and by the Mahomedan law is held to be good respecting death, descent, and marriage. In India, in cases of such description, the declarations of illegitimate members of the family and also of persons who, though not related by blood or marriage to the family, are intimately acquainted with its members and state, is admissible in evidence after the death of the declarant, in the same manner and to the same extent as those of the deceased members of the family. GHURESH HOSSAIN CHOWDHRY v. USEKMONNESSA KHATOON. 11 May, 1898

118. — Declarations of deceased persons in cases of pedigree. Evidence Act, II of 1855, s. 47.—S. 47, Act II of 1855, does not refer to evidence of living witnesses, but to declarations of deceased persons in cases of pedigree, who, though not related by blood or marriage to the family, were intimately acquainted with its members and state. Such declarations, after the death of the declarant,

GYADHUR* 10 W. R., 89

120. ———— Evidence as to lands being mal.—The oral evidence of persons able from their position to testify as to certain lands being mal is not to be rejected as hearsay when they depose that they have known the lands to be mal for many years, and that defendant has been in the habit of paying rent for them. *DABER PRESHAD CHATTERJEE v. 121. ———— Admissions in relation to property—*Evidence Act, s. 60—Admissions of plaintiff's vendor.—The admissions of a person whose position in relation to property in suit it is necessary for one party to prove against another are in the nature of original evidence and not hearsay, though such person is alive and has not been cited as a witness. ALI MOIDIN v. KOMBI AGHAH [I. L. R., 5 Mad., 239]

122. ———— Evidence as to common report—*Lunacy.—Where the fact of lunacy was admitted, and the question was the date at which it commenced, the evidence of a planter in the neighbourhood as to common report for years in the village as to the lunacy having been admitted by the lower Court, the Judicial Committee refused to reject it. The rule as to admission of evidence laid down by Dr. Lushington in Unide Rajah v. Raja Bommarauze v. Pemmasamy Venkatadry Naidoo, 7 Moore's I. A., 137, followed. *BODHARAIN SINGH v. 127. ———— Amount due by mortgagee.—Unless evidence be adduced to show the jummabundi papers to be unreliable, they may be taken as proof that the amounts entered in them are the amounts for which the mortgages in possession may be called upon to account. GUNGA PRESHAD SINGH v. GUNGA KOONWER 2 Agra, Pt. II, 210

128. ———— Evidence of rate of rent.—Held that the entry in the jummabundi alone (though material evidence) is not sufficient to justify a decree for higher rent, if it be shown that the rent actually paid and received by the landlord or his agent for years was less than that therein stated. MOWLAS KOONWER v. SHIVA SAHAI

[1 Agra, Rev., 65]

129. ———— Suit for mere profits.—It is the practice of the Courts to accept the jummabundi papers which are filed by the patwaris under the zamindar's supervision as prima facie evidence of the profits of the estate, it being open to the mortgagee in possession to show that the amounts entered could not with due diligence be collected. *DEONARAIN SINGH v. 134. ———— Evidence Act, 1855, s. 43—Corroborative evidence.—Jumma-wasil-baki papers ought not to be regarded as anything else than "books proved to have been regularly kept in the course of business;" and by s. 43, Act II of 1855, they are "admissible as corroborative, but not as independent, proof of the facts therein stated." They are consequently insufficient by themselves, and without independent proof, to rebut the presumption which arises under s. 4, Act X of 1859, in favour of a defendant who has been found to hold lands at a uniform payment of rent for more than twenty years. KAM LALL CHUCKERBUTTY v. 135. ———— Corroborative evidence—Evidence Act, 1855, s. 43.—Jumma-wasil-baki papers are at the best corroborative evidence, not independent testimony. Quere—Can such papers be dealt with as a "book," or be described as "kept in the regular course of business," within the meaning of s. 43, Act II of 1855? BREJOY GOBIND BURAL v. 139. ———— Right of witness preparing them to refresh his memory from them.—Jumma-wasil-baki papers are not admissible as independent evidence of the amount of rent mentioned therein; but it is perfectly right that a person who has prepared such jumma-wasil-baki papers on receiving payment of the rents should refresh his memory from such papers when giving evidence as to the amount of rent payable. AKHIL CHANDRA CHOWDHRY v. 140. ———— Evidence Act, 1855, ss. 39, 43, 45—Right of witness to refresh memory from them.—In a suit for enhancement of rent, a collection account or jumma-wasil-baki filed many years previously by the plaintiff's predecessor in a suit to which the defendants are not parties is not per se evidence for the plaintiff that the defendants' predecessor held at the rates of rent mentioned therein. Semble—That, if proved to have been regularly kept in the way of business, the paper might have been put in as corroborative evidence under s. 43 of Act II of 1855, or might have been used by the writer thereof to refresh his memory under s. 45. Semble—That, if it were shown that the writer was dead or could not be found, the original might have been put in evidence under s. 39. Semble—That a series of collection accounts or jumma-wasil-baki papers appearing to be regularly kept may be evidence and entitled to credit on the same principle as other contemporaneous records made and kept by the party producing them in the ordinary course of his business. KHERRO MONNE DASSEE v. BEEJOY GOBIND BURAL [7 W. R., 533]

141. ———— Evidence to rebut presumption of uniformity of rent.—Held, in a suit for enhancement of rent, that jumma-wasil-baki papers, when produced by the zamindar at the citation of the defendant himself, were not merely corroborative, but, under s. 4, Act X of 1859, good and sufficient evidence as against the latter in rebutting the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859. SHEE PROSAD DOORNY v. 142. ———— Evidence Act, 1872, s. 34.—Though not alone sufficient to charge any one with liability, documents admissible as evidence under Act I of 1872, s. 34, were held to be sufficient to answer a claim set up to exemption from what would be the ordinary liability of a tenant, e. g., in a suit for enhancement of rent, to rebut a presumption arising from uniform payment for twenty years. BELAST KHAN v. 161. ————— Boundary dispute—Conduct of parties.—In a boundary dispute, where the question relates to the situation of the pillars which formed the line, and the sketch map left by the officer who laid down the pillars affords room for ambiguity as to the direction of the line, it is of importance to see what has been the conduct of the parties since the line of pillars was decreed to be the boundary. If there has been a Government survey, the survey map must be taken as evidence; and if one of the parties has made a settlement according to the survey boundary, the fact must be taken into account unless explained away. RADRA CROWDRAIN v. GIRDHAREEN SAKOO . 20 W. R., 243

162. ————— Boundary dispute.—Where a plaintiff claimed to be holding certain lands under two puttees, and the defendants contended that plaintiff's possession extended only to the cultivated and not to the uncultivated plots of the said lands, but the survey map showed that the land in suit fell within plaintiff's area, and that it was distinguishable from other lands falling within the same boundaries which had been specially reserved by the talukhdar,—Held that, though the testimony of a survey map was not conclusive, it should be not disregarded unless there was clear and direct evidence to the contrary. PROBONNO CHUNDER ROY v. LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA (25 W. R., 458)

164. ————— Suit for possession—Ejectment—Evidence of possession and title.—In a suit for possession of certain land as appertaining to a certain estate and for ejectment of the defendant, brought by a purchaser at a revenue sale, the only evidence adduced by the plaintiff was two survey maps of the years 1846-47 and 1865-66. The lower Court gave the plaintiff a decree for only a portion of the land claimed, such portion being included in both of the maps. The remainder of the land claimed was not included in the map of 1846-47. Held that a survey map is evidence of possession at a particular time, viz., the time at which the survey was made, and may be evidence of title, but as to whether it is sufficient evidence or not, is a question to be decided in each particular case. Held further that, as the two maps showed that the portion of the land decreed to the plaintiff was in his predecessor's possession at the date of both surveys—that is to say, at two periods with an interval of nearly twenty years between them—they might be sufficient evidence of title, and the decree of the lower Court was correct. Mohesh Chandra Sen v. (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 885)

167. ————— Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 83—Thakbust survey map—Statements recorded in such map.—Debutter land within the limits of a revenue-paying mouzah which had been mortgaged by the defendants to a predecessor in title of the plaintiffs was exempted from the mortgage, the deed specifying the number of bighas making the area of the debutter, and this statement in the deed was held to be an admission. Among other evidence, adduced to counteract the effect of this admission, was a thakbust map made at a revenue survey. The ameen who made it had no authority to determine what lands were debutter, but only to lay down and to map boundaries. Held that this map could not be treated as raising a presumption of correctness within s. 83 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, on the question as to the amount of debutter land in one of the villages mapped. Statements also as to what lands were debutter appeared on the face of the map to have been made according to the pointing out of the agents of the proprietors of the mouzah and the principal tenants in the presence of the agents of the holders of estates in the neighbouring mouzabs. Held that these statements were not evidence on the issue now raised. JARAO KUMARI v. 168. ————— Ownership of alluvial land, again formed after diluvion—Evidence of the identity of the sites—Thak and survey maps.—Riparian owners disputed the right of property in plots of alluvial land formed by the action of the current at a place where similar land, within a revenue mahal, bounded on one side by a river had been carried away by diluvion some years before. The claimants in these three separate suits, each claiming possession, had title as zamindars to the formerly existing plots. The new formations now claimed were alleged to have been thrown up on the sites of the former plots, and to be part of the claimants' several estates. These estates were represented in a thakbust map, made before the diluvion, and showing what had been mapped as the boundary lines. On the re-appearance of the land a survey map was made. Between this and the thak map

there were discrepancies as to the boundary lines. There were also differences between the thak and the state of the locality as existing when, for the purpose of this suit, a local investigation was made by an ameen appointed by the Court of first instance. Held that it was not a necessary part of the claimants' cases that there should be a complete agreement between the above maps or that the thak should be shown to accurately represent the former plots. To ascertain the precise boundaries would require more accuracy than could be well expected in a thak map; and the identity of the sites of the reformed plots with those of the plots formerly existing had, in the judgment of their Lordships, been established by evidence reasonably sufficient. MON-MOHINI DEBI v. 263. ———— Documents "without prejudice"—Questions of admissibility of document—"Without prejudice"—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 23.—In a suit for Rs 465 the defendant pleaded limitation. In reply the plaintiff relied on an acknowledgment of the debt given by the defendant. The alleged acknowledgment was written on a post card sent by the defendant to the plaintiff. It was in Gujarati, and was as follows: "I was bound to send Rs 30 according to my vaida (fixed time), but on account of the receipt of the intelligence of the death of my father, I have not been able to fulfil my promise. But now, on his obsequies being over, I will positively pay Rs 30 at Shet Mervanji's. You, Sir, should not entertain any anxiety whatever in respect thereof. As to whatever debts may be due by my old man, I am bound to pay the same so long as there is life in me. This is, indeed, my earnest wish. After this, God's will be done. Therefore, I will positively pay Rs 30." The post card bore on it also the words "without prejudice" in English. The lower Courts held that it was therefore inadmissible in evidence, and consequently that the plaintiff's claim was barred, and they dismissed the suit. The plaintiff thereupon applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi to set aside the decree of the lower Courts on the ground that the post card had been improperly excluded from evidence. Held, discharging the rule, that even if the post card were admissible in evidence, it did not amount to an acknowledgment of the debt claimed by the plaintiff, which was, therefore, barred by limitation. Per CANDY, J. I doubt whether the post card was inadmissible in evidence. To exclude it from evidence, it would be necessary to hold that the words "without prejudice" amounted to an express condition that the card should not be used in evidence against the

s. 6, sch. A—Copy of entry in register—Evidence.—A husband and wife, Mah medana, reentered their marriage under Bengal Act I of 1870, setting out in the form prescribed in sch. A to the Act as "a special condition" that the wife under certain circumstances therein set out might divorce her husband. These circumstances occurred, and the wife divorced her husband. Held in a suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights that the "special condition" was a matter which, under the provisions of the Act, it was the duty of the Mahomedan Registrar to enter in the register, and therefore a copy of the entry in the register was legal evidence of the facts therein contained. KHADEM ALI v. 275. ————— Mercantile custom—Usage of carriers—Liability of carriers for damage to goods.—The defendants, carriers between Hongkong and Bombay, by a condition annexed to their bill of lading, stipulated that they should not be responsible for damage to goods arising from insufficiency of packing. The plaintiff shipped certain goods in one of defendant's steamers in packages which, though in fact insufficient, were packages of the kind ordinarily used for the conveyance of such goods from Hongkong to Bombay. In an action brought to recover damages for injury to the packages.—Held that evidence of mercantile usage or custom would be admissible to show that the words "insufficiency of package" should not be taken in their ordinary sense, but as meaning insufficient according to a special custom of the China trade. PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. 292. ————— Register of members—Winding up Company—Proof of person being shareholder—Presumption of membership.—The evidence adduced by the official liquidator to show that the defendant was a member of the company and so liable as a contributory consisted of the register of members, a letter written by the objector, a reply thereto written by a managing director of the company, and the oral testimony of the director himself. The objector adduced no evidence at all. Held that the official liquidator might, if he had chosen to do so, have put the register in evidence and waited before giving any further evidence until the objector had given some to displace the prima facie evidence afforded by the register or to impugn the character of the register; but his case must be looked at as a whole, and having taken the line which he did, he must take the consequence of his other evidence contradicting or impugning the prima facie evidence of the register, and, notwithstanding that the objector gave no evidence, the register was not conclusive. RAM DAS CHAKRABARTI v. 297. ————— Road-cess Act (Bengal Act X of 1880), s. 95—Road-cess return signed by one of the plaintiff's vendors and the defendant, whether admissible in evidence as against plaintiff and in favour of the defendant.—A road-cess return, signed by one of the plaintiff's vendor and the defendant, was filed by two plaintiffs' vendors. It consisted of two parts, in one of which the joint properties of the plaintiff's vendor and the defendant were set out, and in the other the properties belonging to the defendant alone mentioned. In a suit by the plaintiff for some lands as being the joint property of his vendors and the defendant, the defendant put in the road-cess return in order to disprove plaintiff's allegation, by showing that the lands were included in the second part. The lower Court had relied on this return. It was contended in appeal that it was inadmissible under s. 95 of the Road Cess Act, being evidence in favour of the principal defendant. Held that the road-cess return was evidence against the plaintiff claiming through his vendor, and it is none the less evidence merely because, by admitting it as evidence against the plaintiff, it becomes evidence in favour of the defendant. BENI MADHAN DANDAPAT v. DINA BUNDHU DUTT . . . 3 C. W. N., 848

(2)—Evidence—Deed—Proof of deed denied by the party by whom it was executed, where attesting witnesses were dead.*—A deed of conveyance was tendered in evidence which purported to bear the mark of G as vendor, and which was duly attested by four witnesses. G, however, denied that she had ever executed the deed, and said that the mark was not hers. All the attesting witnesses were dead. A witness was called who knew the handwriting of one of the attesting witnesses, and who swore that the signature of that witness to the attestation clause of the deed was genuine. Held, on the authority of Whitlocks v. Musgrove, 2 Cr. & M., 511, that the deed was admissible in evidence, its execution by G being sufficiently proved. ABDULLA PAKU v. GANNIBAI 1 L. R., 11 Bom., 690

The question was decided in the affirmative by their Lordships on the ground that, whether the evidence offered would itself prove the making of the document or not, it formed good ground for holding that there was a document capable of being proved by secondary evidence, admissible with reference to the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 65, 66. *LUCHMAN SINGH v. sued to recover damages for the non-acceptance of wheat which the defendant on the 16th May 1889, by two contracts, agreed to purchase. At the hearing, in order to prove the terms of the contracts, the plaintiffs tendered two notes or memoranda of the contracts which purported to be signed by the broker and also by the defendant. These notes were in fact the sold notes which the broker had given to the plaintiffs. Each of those notes had been stamped with an anna stamp, but the stamp on one of them had not been cancelled at all, and the stamp on the other was without any mark of cancellation except a small part of the first letter of the defendant's signature, consisting of a slightly curved line. On these notes being tendered in evidence, it was objected that they were inadmissible, being unstamped, having regard to ss. 11 and 34 of the Stamp Act, I of 1879. The Court allowed the objection and rejected the notes. The plaintiffs then sought to prove the contracts by oral evidence, contending that the sold notes did not themselves constitute the contracts, but were only memoranda of parol contracts prepared by the broker for the information of the parties. Held that the terms of the contracts were reduced to writing, and no evidence, except the documents themselves, could be given in proof of them—s. 91 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872. RALLI v. Accordingly D gave H a promissory note for Rs 45, and the property was returned to him. H subsequently sued D on such oral acknowledgment for Rs 45, ignoring the promissory note, which, being insufficiently stamped, was not admissible in evidence. Held that the existence of the promissory note did not debar H from resorting to his original consideration, nor exclude evidence of the oral acknowledgment of the debt. HIRA LAL v. an undivided Hindu family, in consideration of a loan made to them. The money was used for the purpose of the family trade. 344. ————— Promissory note—Note of agreement in account book—Evidence of terms of agreement.—In 1876 accounts were stated between B and D, and a balance of Rs 600 was found to be due from D to B. D gave B an instrument whereby he agreed to pay the amount of such balance in four annual instalments of Rs 200. B at the same time noted in his account book that "such balance was payable in four instalments of Rs 200 yearly." In July 1879 B sued on the instrument for the balance of the first instalment, but the Court held it was a promissory note, and, as it was unstamped, refused to receive it in evidence. B thereupon withdrew his suit with liberty to bring a fresh one. In the subsequent suit B based his claim on the note in his account book. Held by the Court that the agreement by D to pay the balance found due from him to B on account stated between them in instalments of Rs 200 annually could not be proved by the note made by B in his account book, but could only be proved by the promissory note. BEHARSI DAS v. Accordingly, the master executed a document, the material portion of which was as follows:—"Be it known that I have borrowed Rs 86-15 from you in order to pay a decree which was due to you by D P, so I write this in your favour to say that I will pay the said amount to you in six months with interest at 12 annas on every hundred rupees every month, and then take back this parwana from you." This was written upon plain unstamped paper. Subsequently, the amount due not having been paid, the decree-holder sued the executant of the document for its recovery. It was objected that the suit was not maintainable without the document being put in evidence, but that being a promissory note and not stamped as required by art. 11 of sch. I of the General Stamp Act (I of 1879), it was inadmissible in evidence with reference to s. 34. Held that the document, though it was a promissory note, was not the contract out of which the defendant's liability arose, but was merely a collateral security for the defendant's fulfilment of his promise to pay the debt, and that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff was entitled to give evidence of consideration, and to maintain the suit as for money lent, apart from the note altogether. BALBHADAR PRASAD v. 347. — Evidence Act, s. 65, cl. (b), and s. 91—Stamp Act (I of 1879), s. 34, prov. 1—Suit on an unstamped promissory note.—The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant the balance of a debt due on an unstamped note passed to him by the defendant for consideration of Rs 38. The note recited that the defendant had received the amount, and would repay it after three months from the date of its execution. The defendant admitted, by his written statement, execution of the note and the receipt of Rs 37 in the shape of paddy, but alleged that he had paid off the debt. He also contended that the note, being unstamped, could not be admitted in evidence. The plaintiff contended that the note was a bond, and could be admitted on payment of the stamp duty and the penalty, under s. 34 of the Stamp Act I of 1879, which he offered to pay. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the note in question was a promissory note, but that the defendant's admission of the consideration enabled the plaintiff to sue, although the note itself was inadmissible. On reference to the High Court, —Held per JADINER, J., that the document sued on was a promissory note, and that, the suit being brought on it as the original cause of action, the admission of its contents by the defendant did not avail the plaintiff, the document itself being inadmissible for want of a stamp. Held per BIRDWOOD, J., that the plaintiff could not recover irrespectively of the promissory note, as he did not seek to prove the consideration otherwise than by the note which was inadmissible in evidence. The admission contained in the defendant's written statement did not amount to an admission of the claim as for money lent. The case was one in which no secondary evidence under s. 65, cl. (b), of Act I of 1879 was admissible, the primary evidence, the document itself, being forthcoming. The plaintiff not having offered any independent evidence of the advance alleged by him, and the defendant not having admitted by his written statement that any money was lent to him, as alleged by the plaintiff, but having set up an entirely different transaction, in respect of which he admitted no remaining liability, the plaintiff's suit

348. — Evidence Act, s. 91—Bill of exchange—Original consideration—Evidence—Stamp—Account stated.—When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold or for money lent, or for any other claim, and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he had not endorsed, or lost, or parted with the bill or note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person. But when the original cause of action is the bill or note itself, and does not exist independently of it, as, for instance, when, in consideration of A depositing money with B, B contracts by a promissory note to repay it with interest at six months' date, here there is no cause of action for money lent, or otherwise than upon the note itself, because the deposit is made upon the terms contained in the note, and no other. In such a case the note is the only contract between the parties, and if for want of a proper stamp or some other reason the note is not admissible in evidence, the creditor must lose his money. AKBAR v. The defendant denied execution of the bond, and that she had had any dealings or stated any account with the plaintiff. The Courts below disallowed the first claim as barred by limitation, and disallowed the second on the ground that the bond had effected a novation of the contract implied by the statement of accounts, and the plaintiff not being able to produce the bond or to maintain a suit on it by reason of its being unregistered, and the registration having been refused owing to the denial of execution by the defendant, the claim on the account stated failed. Held that this decision was wrong, and that the plaintiff was entitled to sue upon the account stated. Sirdar Kuar v. The Judge coming to the conclusion that the document sued upon was promissory note, and should have been stamped with a two-anna stamp, refused to admit it in evidence. He also came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had no cause of action independently of the document, and dismissed the suit. Held that the plaintiff had a cause of action independently of the document. Held also that an implied contract to repay money lent always arises from the fact that the money is lent, even though no express promise, either written or verbal, is made to repay it. Therefore, in a case where the defendant admits the loan, and has not repaid it, the plaintiff may maintain an action against him for breach of his implied promise or contract, entirely independent of any security which may have been given for the advance. *Akbar v. 359. Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Terms of tenancy proved orally, although contained in a document—Landlord and tenant—Lease, Terms of.—The plaintiffs alleged that in 1866 the defendant's father had let land to their predecessor in title in perpetuity on fawadari tenure for building purposes, subject to a certain rent. They complained that the defendant sought to eject them, and they prayed for a declaration that they were entitled to the land in perpetuity, subject only to payment of the yearly rent. In the event of its being held that they were not perpetual tenants, they prayed that the defendant might be ordered to pay them Rs 7,000, the value of the buildings on the land. The plaintiffs made out a prima facie case without showing, or its being shown, that there was any agreement or lease. Before the case had concluded, however, a document was produced which was said to be a counterpart of the agreement of letting made in 1866. It was not registered, and was therefore inadmissible in evidence. It was not tendered, but it was shown to the defendant in cross-examination, and he denied that it was a genuine document. Held that the plaintiffs, having made out a prima facie case without betraying the existence of a written contract relating to the subject-matter of the suit, were not precluded from obtaining a decree, even though it afterwards appeared that a written contract had been made. If the defendant intended to rely upon a written contract, it was for him to produce it as part of his evidence. In the present case, as the document was not referred to in the plaint, written statement, or answer, and was not before the Court, the evidence should be looked at to ascertain the terms of the tenancy by which the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title held the property. YESHWADARAI v. A instituted the present suit for recovery of possession of the said property, and the defendant set up in his defence that A had no right to sue for a moiety of the property, as the same had been conveyed to B; and that the endorsement of the deed of sale, "Returned; no claim," was not admissible in evidence, as the same had not been registered. Held that the entry was only evidence that the transaction was inchoate, and not final, so as to require a re-conveyance. GHISAK CHANDRA ROY CHOWDREY v. The pottah and kabuliati had not been registered. A previous suit brought by the plaintiff under Act X of 1859 had been therefore dismissed, and no oral evidence was admitted to prove the terms of the pottah and kabuliati. The defendants now claimed a set-off against the amount claimed under the bond on the footing of a contract contained in the pottah and kabuliati. The Judge refused to receive them in evidence, or to receive oral evidence of their contents, and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the High Court. Held, the defendant having benefited in the Act X suit by the fact that no oral evidence had been admitted to prove the contents of the pottah and kabuliati, it would have been contrary to rule and inequitable to admit such evidence now in support of his claim of set-off. DINAMATH MOOKERJEE v. 365. ————— Destruction of deed, Proof of—Admission of registered copy.—In a suit on a bond, the defendant by his answer denied execution of the bond. The plaintiff in his reply stated the accidental destruction of the bond, and prayed leave to put in evidence a registered copy thereof, which the Court allowed, and at the same time ordered the fragments of the original to be produced. At the trial the plaintiff produced the fragments, and under s. 11, Madras Regulation XVII of 1802, put in as evidence a registered copy of the bond. He called no witnesses to prove that the fragments produced formed part of the original bond. The Court admitted the registered copy as evidence and found for the plaintiff. The Judicial Committee on appeal reversed this finding on the ground that the registered copy, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of the destruction of the original bond, was improperly admitted as secondary evidence. ABDAS ALI KHAN v. Court.—Whether or not sufficient proof of search for, or loss of, an original document, to lay a ground for the admission of secondary evidence, has been given, is a point proper to be decided by the Judge of first instance, and is treated as depending very much on his discretion. His conclusion should not be overruled, except in a clear case of miscarriage. In a suit alleging want of authority to adopt, the defence rested on the case that an annamati patro had been given by the defendant's deceased husband, but failed to show that there had been a sufficient search for, and to establish the loss of, the original document, so as to render secondary evidence of its contents admissible. HARRIPALA DEBI v. usufructuary mortgage of rights and interests in two villages. In 1871 the purchaser of a portion of the mortgagor's rights, alleging that the mortgage-debt had been liquidated from the usufruct, sued to recover possession of the property. The mortgagees resisted the claim for possession on the grounds that, prior to the execution of the deed in 1812, the mortgagor's ancestor had granted to their own ancestor a gawanda-dari right under which a fixed jumma of Rs. 121 was payable by them in respect of the lands in the village; that what was mortgaged was not the lands, but only the right to receive the fixed jumma; and that the fact that the mortgage-money had been liquidated from the jumma did not entitle the plaintiff to oust them from possession. It appeared that the alleged gawanda-pattar, the original mortgage-deed, and the decree of the 17th May 1813 were at one time in the defendants' possession, but the defendants alleged that all three documents were destroyed by fire in 1872. The plaintiff sought to support his case by putting in a copy on plain paper purporting to have been transcribed from a certified copy of the decree of the 17th May 1813. Held that the destruction or loss of the three documents alleged by the defendants to have been destroyed not being proved, their non-production placed them under the recognized prohibitions of the law of evidence, and subjected them to the presumption recognized by ill. (g), s. 114 of the Evidence Act, that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it. Held also that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was no party to the alleged gawanda-pattar nor to the mortgage of 1812, nor to the litigation which resulted in the decree of the 17th May 1813, and could not therefore be taken to be in a position to produce these documents or to prove their contents by secondary evidence, and inasmuch as the circumstances established a prima facie case in his favour, the burden of proof in regard to the existence of the alleged gawanda-dari tenure lay upon the defendants, who, whilst in a position which would involve their being in possession of the documents above mentioned, and whilst admitting such possession up to the year 1872, had failed to prove either their destruction or their contents by secondary evidence such as could be relied on. *Rajah Kishen Dutt Ram Panday v. that the right to this indemnity related to a future revenue settlement, nor had it been decided that the agreement was to run with the land as to bind others, under whatever title they might be in possession. In the suit in which that judgment was given, the ikarnama not having been produced, the Court of first instance would not admit secondary evidence of its contents. On appeal, inspection of the document having been offered to, and declined by, the Appellate Court, secondary evidence was admitted. On this appeal, the error was pointed out of allowing the plaintiff to give secondary evidence of the contents of a document, the original of which was in his custody, without the Court's looking at the document.

(c) COPIES OF DOCUMENTS AND COPIES OF COPIES.

390. ———— Copies of documents—Cause of non-production of original.—Although the admissibility in India of copies in evidence must not be dealt with by the strict rules prevailing at a mini trial in England, yet their Lordships were of opinion that, when a copy has been in any way received, and it becomes the function of the Judge to consider what weight and value should be given to it, it is the duty of the Judge, in order to test its authenticity, to satisfy himself that there is some reason for producing a copy instead of the original, that there should be some account given in ordinary cases of the original, and some sufficient reason assigned why the original is not produced, and the parties rely upon the copy. In all cases the whole of the circumstances should be looked at in order that the Judge may come to a definite conclusion as to the genuineness of the document in question, and the weight and value which he will attach to it. There is a considerable difference between cases where documents come in as mere links or as part only of the evidence in the case, and those in which the suit is actually brought upon the instrument of which a copy is tendered, and the whole cause of action depends on the proof of the original instrument; strict proof may properly be required in the latter case. Dealing with the present document, their Lordships were not prepared to say that the High Court had miscarried in concluding it to be genuine; but the High Court did not rest upon that document wholly, but proceeded upon the whole of the evidence in the case, which appeared to their Lordships amply sufficient to support the finding of the Court. RANGOPAL ROY v. GORDON, STUART & Co. 17 W. R., 285; 14 Moore's L. A., 453

391. ———— Permission to file original.—Documents tendered as evidence are properly rejected on the ground that they are copies inadmissible under the Law of Evidence, and it is entirely a matter of discretion of the Court in rejecting a copy to allow the party to file the original. HURSHUR MOJOOMDAR v. CHURN MASHRE [22 W. R., 355]

392. ———— Accounting for absence of original.—A copy of a document should not be received in evidence until all legal means have been exhausted for procuring the original. Where a document is alleged to be in the possession or power of a certain party, such party's denial in pleading that he has ever had the document is not sufficient to justify the omission of the processes the law provides for his testimony, and of his being called on to produce the original. If a Judge is satisfied of a plaintiff's inability to produce an original pottah on which he relies, he ought to allow secondary evidence to be given of the contents of the document; but he should be satisfied, on reasonable grounds, that the evidence gives a true version of its contents, and he should require sufficient evidence of the execution of the pottah. SHOOKHAN SOOHUL v. RAM LALL SOOHUL [9 W. R., 248]

393. ———— Accounting for absence of original.—A copy of a document cannot be admitted as evidence, unless the absence of the original is properly accounted for; the mere fact of the latter being in another Court is not a sufficient reason. GOURMONEE v. HURSE KISHORE ROY [10 W. R., 386]

403. ————— Mortgage decrees lost—Evidence of foreclosure—Evidence Act, s. 63.—In 1840 K mortgaged a certain house to two brothers, B and C. The mortgage-deed contained a gahan-lahan clause, or clause of conditional sale. It appeared that in 1852 the mortgaged house passed into the possession of B and C, and it was alleged that in that year the mortgage had been foreclosed. At a subsequent partition of the family property the house fell to the share of B, whose widow P (defendant No. 1) sold it to L (defendant No. 2) in 1868, and L in 1871 sold it to T (defendant No. 3). In 1881 T brought this suit to redeem the property. The foreclosure-decree of 1852 was not forthcoming, and the defendants alleged that it had been burned along with other judicial records at the burning of the Budhvar Palace at Poona in 1879. The only evidence that such a decree had been passed was a reference to a copy of the decree contained in a judgment passed in another suit, and a statement by C (who was dead in 1881) that the mortgage had been foreclosed. The lower Courts held that the reference in the above-mentioned judgment to the copy of the foreclosure

Secondary evidence of notice—Press-copy letter—Evidence of original letter having been properly addressed and posted.—Upon the settlement of the list of contributories to the assets of a company in course of liquidation under the Indian Companies Act, one of the persons named in the list denied that he had agreed to become a member of the company or was liable as a contributory. The District Court admitted as evidence on behalf of the official liquidator a press copy of a letter addressed to the objector for the purpose of proving that a notice of allotment of shares was duly communicated. No notice to the objector to produce the original letter appeared on the record; but at the hearing of the appeal it was alleged by the official liquidator and denied by the objector that such notice had been in fact given. There was no evidence as to the posting of the original letter or of the address which it bore; but the press copy was contained in the press-copy letter book of the Company, and was proved to be in the handwriting of a deceased secretary of the company, whose duty it was to despatch letters after they had been copied in the letter book. The objector denied having received the letter or any notice of allotment. Held that the Court should not draw the inference that the original letter was properly addressed or posted; that the press-copy letter was inadmissible in evidence; and that there was no proof of the communication of any notice of allotment. RAM DAS CHAKRABATI v. The question was decided in the affirmative by their Lordships. Because the evidence consisting of a copy which was made of a document and filed (in another suit) among the records of the Court, and still there, endorsed, "copy in accordance with the original," signed by the Judge who presided in the Court, who alone was authorized to compare and accept such copy, there were grounds for considering it genuine. LUCHMAN SINGH v. 1. CONSIDERATION OF, AND MODE OF DEALING WITH, EVIDENCE.

1. Evidence of robbery considered in trial for murder—Trial for robbery and murder—Offences constituting parts of the same transaction—Verdict of jury.—Persons convicted of robbery by a Sessions Judge and a jury, and of murder by the Sessions Judge with assessors, appealed to the High Court against the conviction on the charge of murder. Held that, in coming to a conclusion as to whether the evidence justified the conviction appealed against, the verdict of the jury should not be taken into consideration. But on its appearing that the two offences constituted parts of the same transaction, Held that recent and unexplained possession of the stolen property which would be presumptive evidence against the prisoners on the charge of robbery was similarly evidence against them on the charge of murder. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SAMI 1 L. R., 13 Mad., 426

2. Evidence showing commission of another offence by accused other than that for which they are being tried—Evidence, Admissibility of.—In a criminal trial evidence otherwise admissible is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that it discloses the commission of an offence other than that in respect of which the trial is being held. *Reg. v. 8. ———— Evidence Act, s. 54.—In charging the jury upon the trial of a prisoner for being dishonestly in the possession of stolen goods, the Judge directed the jury to consider the proof of previous convictions for theft as evidence from which inference might fairly be drawn as to the character of the accused. Held that this amounted to a misdirection: for, though s. 54 of the Evidence Act declares that "the fact that the accused person has been previously convicted of an offence is relevant," yet the same section also declares that "the fact that he has a bad character is irrelevant," and that the evidence was irrelevant and inadmissible. *ROSHUN DOSADH v. occasions, that he has badmashes in his employ to assist him, and generally that he is a man of bad character, is not evidence of general repute under s. 117 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Evidence of rumour is mere hearsay evidence of a particular fact. Evidence of repute is a different thing. A man's general reputation is the reputation which he bears in the place in which he lives amongst all the townsmen, and if it is proved that a man who lives in a particular place is looked upon by his fellow-townsmen, whether they happen to know him or not, as a man of good repute, that is strong evidence that he is a man of good character. On the other hand, if the state of things is that the body of his fellow-townsmen, who know him, look upon him as a dangerous man and a man of bad habits, that is strong evidence that he is a man of bad character. It cannot be said that, because there are rumours in a particular place among a certain class of people that a man has done particular acts or has characteristics of a certain kind, these rumours are in themselves evidence under s. 117 of the Code. *RAI ISHI PRASAD v. officer the witnesses deposed to the absconder having been one of the participants in the crime charged against the prisoners then under trial. In the Sessions Court the Judge did not record that the sixth accused person had absconded, and the evidence was recorded against the prisoners then under trial only. In 1886 the absconder was apprehended and tried before the Court of Session upon the charge of murder. At that time most of the former witnesses were dead, and the Sessions Judge, referring to s. 33 of the Evidence Act, admitted in evidence against the prisoner the depositions given in 1874 before both the Magistrate and the Sessions Court. (e).—Before the deposition of a medical witness taken by a committing Magistrate can, under s. 509 of the Criminal Procedure Code, be given in evidence at the trial before the Court of Session, it must either appear from the Magistrate's record or be proved by the evidence of witnesses to have been taken and attested in the accused's presence. It should not merely be presumed, under s. 114, illus. (e), of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) to have been so taken and attested. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RIDING . . . I. L. R., 9 All., 720

was taken and attested in accused's presence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 80.—Although all depositions of witnesses in criminal cases should be taken and attested in the presence of the accused, and a few apt words should be used on the face of the deposition to make it apparent that this has been done, there is no provision of the law which makes the attestation of the deposition by the Court in the presence of the accused obligatory. S. 80 of the Evidence Act, therefore, does not warrant the presumption that the deposition of a medical witness taken by a committing Magistrate has been taken and attested in the accused's presence, so as to make such deposition admissible in evidence at the trial before the Court of Session under s. 509 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Queen-Emress v. 5. DYING DECLARATIONS.

48. ——— Proof of state of deceased person—Mode of recording declaration.—A dying declaration is admissible in evidence in all criminal cases, provided the conditions attaching to its admission have been fulfilled, and is not confined to cases in which the death of the injured party is the sole object of enquiry. There must be evidence of the state of the deceased person at the time of making the declaration. The Magistrate recording a dying declaration should put on record the answer of the declarant to a question touching his knowledge or belief in his approaching death. QUEEN v. UJRAIL 3 N. W., 219

49. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 371.—In determining whether a declaration alleged to have been made by a deceased person is admissible as a dying declaration under s. 371, Code of Criminal Procedure, a Sessions Judge ought to direct his attention to the point whether the declarant believed himself to be in danger of approaching death. The evidence of persons who cannot speak of their own personal knowledge to such declaration should not be admitted; and in deciding whether the accused is guilty of the charge of murdering the deceased declarant, the Court should confine itself to enquiring into the facts which occurred on the day of the murder. QUEEN v. ZUNIR 10 W. R., Cr., 11

50. ——— Procedure.—Before a dying declaration can be received in evidence, it must be distinctly found that the person who made the declaration knew or believed at the time he made it that he was dying or was likely to die. Where a Sessions Judge sees from the Magistrate's record that there is evidence which could prove that the declaration was a dying declaration, he should call for that evidence. A Magistrate should, in all cases in which dying declarations are made, examine the complainant on the point, and record the question as well as the answer to it upon the record of the examination. IN THE MATTER OF TAROO

55. ——— Cause of death signified in answer to question—Admissibility of evidence as to signs—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 3, s. 5, expts. 1, 2, s. 9, and s. 32—"Fact"—"Conduct"—"Verbal" statement.—In a trial upon a charge of murder, it appeared that the deceased, shortly before her death, was questioned by various persons as to the circumstances in which the injuries had been inflicted on her, that she was at that time unable to speak, but was conscious and able to make signs. Evidence was offered by the prosecution, and admitted by the Sessions Judge, to prove the questions put to the deceased, and the signs made by her in answer to such questions. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that the questions and the signs taken together might properly be regarded as "verbal statements" made by a person as to the cause of her death within the meaning of s. 32 of the Evidence Act, and were therefore admissible in evidence under that section. PER STRAIGHT, J., that statements by the witness, as to their impressions of what the signs meant were inadmissible, and should be eliminated; but that, assuming that the questions put to the deceased were responded to by her in such a manner as to leave no doubt in the mind of the Court as to her meaning, it was not straining the construction to hold that the circumstances were covered by s. 32. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the expression "verbal statements" in s. 32 should be confined to statements made by means of a word or words, and that the signs made by the deceased, not being verbal statements in this sense, were not admissible in evidence under that section. Per PETHESAM, C.J., that the signs could not be proved as "conduct" within the meaning of s. 8 of the Evidence Act, inasmuch as, taken alone, and without reference to the questions leading to them, there was nothing to connect them with the cause of death, and so to make them relevant; while the questions could not be proved either under explanation 2 of s. 8 or under s. 9, inasmuch as the condition precedent to their admissibility under either of these provisions was the relevancy of the conduct which they were alleged to effect, or of the facts which they were intended to explain. The "conduct" made relevant by s. 8 is conduct which is directly and immediately influenced by a fact in issue or relevant fact, and it does not include actions resulting from some intermediate cause, such as questions or suggestions by other persons. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the word "conduct" as used in s. 8 does not mean only such conduct as is directly and immediately influenced by a fact in issue or relevant fact; that the signs made by the deceased were the conduct of "a person an offender against whom was the subject of any proceeding" and were relevant as such under s. 8, and that the questions put to her were admissible in evidence either under explanation 2 of the same section or under s. 9 by way of an explanation of the meaning of the signs. *QUEEN-EMPRAS v. There was some evidence that B had said her husband was dead a few days after his disappearance; and some bones, a skull and some cloths were found in a neighbouring burying ground which were identified as those of C. B made a statement, recorded on June 4th by the village Munsif, to the effect that she had lured C into a garden, and that A, who was her paramour, had murdered him in her arms, which statement she repeated frequently with greater detail in answer to questions from the committing Magistrate, and subsequently before the Sessions Court. On her appeal to the High Court, after she had been sentenced to death, she retracted her former statements and made the usual charges of ill-treatment against the police. A made a statement to the committing Magistrate, which he subsequently repudiated before the Sessions Court, to the effect that he had assisted in disposing of the corpse of C at the request of his brother-in-law, who corroborated the statement in two depositions before the Magistrate, which were likewise repudiated by the deponent before the Sessions Court. 89. ———— Handwriting, Proof of—Statement by third party Memorandum.—N was charged with having made a false statement before a Sub-Registrar in identifying A, a person who had executed a mortgage-deed in favour of B, and who was a neighbour of his (N's), as being a person to whom B had agreed to advance the money, the consideration of the mortgage. The false statement contained in his stating to the Sub-Registrar that he "knew K as his neighbour." During the hearing of the case it was sought to prove a statement made by K to a third party (K having died previous to the institution of the case) to the effect that N had told him certain facts. A memorandum, alleged to be in the handwriting of N, was also tendered and received in evidence without any further proof as to its being in N's handwriting than that it bore a similarity to another piece of paper proved to bear his handwriting. Held that the statement made by K to the third party was inadmissible and irrelevant, and that the

83. — Privileged communication.—Letter from husband to wife—Letter taken on search of wife's house—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 122.—On a trial for the offence of breach of trust by a public servant, a letter was tendered in evidence for the prosecution which had been sent by the accused to his wife at Pondicherry and had been found on a search of her house made there by the police. Held that the letter was admissible in evidence against the accused. S. 122 of the Evidence Act was not applicable. QUEEN-EMPEROR v. DONAGHUE

85. — Receiving illegal gratification—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 161, 165—Evidence of subsequent but unconnected receipt, showing footing on which parties stood—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 5-18 and 14.—The accused was charged with having received illegal gratification from C & Co. on three specific occasions in 1876. In 1876, 1877, and 1878, C & Co. were doing business as commissariat contractors, and the accused was the manager of the Commissariat office. Held that evidence of similar but unconnected instances of receiving illegal gratifications from C & Co. in 1877 and 1878 was not admissible against him under ss. 5 to 18 of the Evidence Act. Held per GARTH, C.J. (MACLEAN, J., concurring), the evidence was not admissible under s. 14. Per GARTH, C.J.—S. 14 applies to cases where a particular act is more or less criminal or culpable according to the state of mind or feeling of the person who does it; not to cases where the question of guilt or innocence depends upon actual facts, and not upon the state of a man's mind or feeling. Per MITRA, J.—If the receipt of the illegal gratifications mentioned in the charge be considered proved by other evidence, and if it were necessary to ascertain whether the accused received them as a motive for showing favour in the exercise of his official functions, the alleged transactions of 1877 and 1878 would be relevant under s. 14, but they would not be relevant to establish the fact of payments in 1876. EMPEROR v. 12. JUDGMENT IN CIVIL SUIT.

86. — Judgment in civil suit out of which criminal prosecution arises.—In a suit by A against the obligors of a bond, the Court held, for the reasons stated in its judgment, that the signatures of the obligors were not genuine, and directed the prosecution of A on a charge of forgery. On the trial of A before a jury, this judgment of the Civil Court was put in evidence on behalf of the prosecution, and its contents commented on by the Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury. Held that this judgment had been illegally admitted. GOGUY CHUNDER GHOSH v. EMPRESS

87. — Admissibility in criminal prosecutions of judgment in a civil suit.—Per RAMPINI, J.—A judgment in a civil action cannot be given in evidence in a criminal prosecution for establishing the truth of the facts upon which it is rendered. Whatever may be the nature of the decision of the Civil Court, the Magistrate ought to decide the question of the accused's criminality by himself. Per GHOSH, J.—The decision in a civil suit would be admissible in evidence in a criminal case if the parties are substantially the same and the issues in the two cases are identical. RAS KUMARI DEBI v. 14. MEDICAL EVIDENCE.

99. — Examination of medical witness.—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 323.—Per FIELD, J.—Under the provisions of s. 323 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the examination of a medical witness taken and duly attested may be given in evidence in any criminal trial; but in order that such evidence may be admissible against any individual accused person, the examination must have been taken in the presence of the accused person. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF JHUBBOO MANTON. EMPRESS v. JHUBBOO MANTON

100. — Experts, Evidence of.—Medical witnesses, Evidence of—Opinion of experts how elicited—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 45.—A medical man who has not seen a corpse which has been subjected to a post-mortem examination, and who is called to corroborate the opinion of the medical man who made such post-mortem examination, and who has stated what he considered was the cause of death, is in a position to give evidence of his opinion as an expert. The proper mode of eliciting such opinion is to put the signs observed at the post-mortem to the witness and to ask what in his opinion was the cause of death on the hypothesis that those signs were really present and observed. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. MEHES ALI MULLICK

101. — Expert's opinion.—Report of post-mortem examination.—The evidence of a medical man who has seen and has made a post-mortem examination of the corpse of the person touching whose death the enquiry is, is admissible, firstly, to prove the nature of injuries which he observed; and, secondly, as evidence of the opinion of an expert as to the manner in which those injuries were inflicted, and as to the cause of death. A medical man who has not seen the corpse is only in a position to give evidence of his opinion as an expert. A medical man in giving evidence may refresh his memory by referring to a report which he has made of his post-mortem examination, but the report itself cannot be treated as evidence, and no facts can be taken therefrom. BAJHUM SINGH v. THE STATE

102. — Report of subordinate medical officer.—Concurrence of superior officer.—The substance of a report from a subordinate medical officer, with an expression of concurrence by his superior, cannot be read in evidence under s. 368 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHRISTAMONEN NYS
[11 W. R., Cr., 2]

103. — Letter from medical officer.—Letter expressing opinion.—A letter of a medical officer expressing an opinion is not evidence under ss. 368 and 370 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. QUEEN v. KAMINER DOSSEN

15. NATIVE SEALS.

104. — Comparison of native seals.—Evidence Act, 1855, s. 46.—S. 48, Act II of 1855, is applicable to criminal trials. The test of comparison of native seals is at best but a fallible one, and must always be received with extreme caution. QUEEN v. AMANGOLLAH MOLLAH
[6 W. R., Cr., 6]

16. NOTES OF INQUIRY.

105. — Notes on inquiry by registering officer.—The notes of an inquiry held before a registering officer are not admissible as evidence of what the prisoner said on that occasion. QUEEN v. PURNANUND BARICK
[11 W. R., Cr., 13]

17. POLICE EVIDENCE, DIARIES, PAPERS, AND REPORTS.

106. — Evidence of police officer.—Act II of 1855, s. 31.—The practice of not examining a police officer who investigates a case condemned. The statements made to him might be proved by him in the witness-box, and would be admissible to corroborate the evidence of other witnesses on the same point given in Court before the Magistrate and Sessions Judge under s. 31, Act II of 1855. QUEEN v. AHMED ALEY
[11 W. R., Cr., 25]

107. — Statement of constable of police.—Where the accused was charged with attempting to murder her child, the chief constable's statement (he having gone to search the house of the accused) that he "had information that the accused was about to kill the child," was most improperly admitted as evidence against the accused. REG. v. CHIMA
[8 Bom. Cr., 164]

108. — Police diaries.—Corroborative evidence.—Under s. 154, Code of Criminal Procedure, police diaries cannot be admitted as corroborative evidence. QUEEN v. THAKOOR CHUND SURMA
[13 W. R., Cr., 22]

109. — Police diaries.—Corroborative evidence.—Police diaries cannot be legally used as substantive evidence or read to the jury. QUEEN v. HIRADUT SURMA
[8 W. R., Cr., 66]

110. — Use of portion of diary.—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 154.—Where certain portions of a police officer's diary are used as evidence against him, s. 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not bar the admission of other portions of the diary as explaining the portions so used. QUEEN v. NOBOKHUTO GHOSH

of Bengal bearing a forged endorsement, and was arrested. A police constable asked N if he knew G D. N replied that he knew him as a common man. The police constable then asked N if he knew anything about the note. N replied that he did not. No threat or inducement was held out, nor was any caution administered to N. Held that the statements made by N in answer to the questions of the police constable were admissible. N was afterwards brought before R, the Deputy Magistrate of Serampore, who told him, before any depositions were taken, that he (N) was charged with having received a stolen promissory note, and R asked him if he wished to say anything. N replying in the affirmative, R, without administering any caution to him, asked him how or where he had obtained the note, and other questions, the answers to which were taken down. N was again brought up before R, and was asked whether a promissory note then produced was the one he had delivered to G D to take to the Bank. R told N that he was not bound to answer the question, but if he did, the answer would be taken down, and that, if he objected to answer, that would also be noted. R committed N to take his trial before the High Court. Held that on the trial the answer of N to the questions of R, whether R acted as a Justice of the Peace for Bengal or as a Magistrate, were admissible. *QUEEN v. taken place. Held that, these documents being inadmissible in evidence under s. 119 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, evidence ought to have been given as to what was actually stated by the accused to the inspector of police. IN THE MATTER OF DABU C. C. L. R., 47

129. — Criminal Procedure Code, s. 119—Evidence Act, 1872, ss. 91-155, 159. — S. 119 of the Code of Criminal Procedure not making it obligatory upon a police officer to reduce to writing any statements made to him during an investigation, neither that section nor s. 91 of the Evidence Act renders oral evidence of such statements inadmissible. If the statements be actually reduced to writing, the writing itself cannot be treated as part of the record or used as evidence, but may be used for the purpose of refreshing memory under s. 159 of the Evidence Act. Consequently the person making the statements may properly be questioned about them; and, with a view to impeach his credit, the police officer himself, or any other person in whose hearing the statements were made, can be examined on the point under s. 155 of the Evidence Act. *REG. v. 130. — Statements made by prisoners during police custody—Evidence Act, s. 27. — Under s. 27 of the Evidence Act, not every statement made by a person accused of any offence while in the custody of a police officer, connected with the production or finding of property, is admissible. Those statements only which lead immediately to the discovery of property, and in so far as they do lead to such discovery, are properly admissible. Whatever be the nature of the fact discovered, that fact must, in all cases, be itself relevant to the case, and the connection between it and the statements made must have been such that that statement constituted the information through which the discovery was made, in order to render the statement admissible. Other statements connected with the one thus made evidence, and thus immediately, but not necessarily or directly, connected with the fact discovered, are not admissible. That a witness says that a plan was prepared in his presence is not a sufficient reason for admitting the plan in evidence, unless the witness also says that to his own knowledge the plan is correct. *REG. v. It is sufficient if such statement is substantially an answer to one or more questions addressed to the witness before the statement is made. The provisions of ss. 191 and 193 of the Penal Code apply to the case of false statements made under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. It is not illegal, though unnecessary, for a police officer recording a statement under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, to obtain the signatures of persons present at the time to authenticate his record of such statement. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. But where it appeared that, but for the principal witness for the defence having been discredited by means of proof of a previous inconsistent statement made by the said witness before the investigating officer, the accused would have been acquitted, it was held that this amounted to a using of such statement as evidence against the accused within the meaning of s. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. 20. STATEMENTS TO POLICE OFFICERS —continued.

Procedure Code—Police diaries.—The privilege given by s. 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not extend to statements taken under s. 161, but recorded in the diary made under s. 172. SHEHU SHA v. QUEEN-EMPRESS I. L. R., 20 Cal., 642

141. Criminal Procedure Code (1889), ss. 161 and 162—Statements made to police officer in the course of an investigation—Use of notes of such statements at trial before the Court of Session—Police diaries—Practice.—A police officer's notes of statements made to him in the course of an investigation and recorded by him under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should, if used at all at the subsequent trial, be used only after proper proof of them, and of the circumstances under which they were recorded, and under the direct sanction of the presiding Judge. Copies of such notes should not be given without question, and, as a matter of course, to the accused or his counsel. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NABIN-UD-DIN

[I. L. R., 16 All., 207]

142. Criminal Procedure Code (1889), ss. 161 and 162—Use at trial in Sessions Court of statements made to police officer investigating case.—Though, speaking generally, statements, other than dying declarations, made to a police officer in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure may be used at the trial in favour of an accused person, such statements can only be so used when they are legally brought as evidence before the Court, that is to say, a witness having been cross-examined as to a statement, it may be shown by the evidence of the police officer that he did make a statement favourable to the accused, which the witness denies having made; and if the statement was at the time reduced into writing by the police officer, he would be allowed to refresh his memory by referring to it, but the written statement itself, when the statement has been reduced into writing (according to the section, it must not be signed by the person making it), cannot be used as direct evidence of what was stated by the witness to the police officer. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TAJ KHAN

[I. L. R., 17 All., 57]

143. Criminal Procedure Code (1889), ss. 161, 162, 167, and 172—Police diaries—What the diary should or should not contain—statements recorded under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure—Use which may be made of the special diary by the Court—Sessions Judge, Power of—Right of the accused or his agent to see the special diary—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 89, 145 and 161.—A Sessions Judge, although he has power in any particular case which is before him to send for the police diaries connected with the case, if he thinks it necessary to peruse them, has no authority to issue a general order that in every case committed for trial to the Court of Session and in every criminal appeal the police diaries shall be submitted to the Court simultaneously with the Magistrate's record of the case. Such an order is illegal. In no case is an accused person entitled as of right to a copy of any statement recorded by a police officer in the special diary prepared under the authority of s. 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The special diary may be used by the Court to assist it in the inquiry or trial by suggesting means of further elucidating points which need clearing up, and which are material for the purpose of doing justice between the Crown and the accused; but entries in the special diary cannot by themselves be taken as evidence of any date, fact, or statement therein contained. The special diary may also be used by the Court for the purpose of contradicting the police officer who made it, and the special diary may be used by the police officer who made it, and by no witness other than such officer, for the purpose of refreshing his memory. If the special diary is used by the Court to contradict the police officer who made it, or by the police officer who made it to refresh his memory, the accused person or his agent has a right to see that portion of the diary which has been referred to for either of these purposes, that is to say, the accused person or his agent is entitled to see the particular entry which has been referred to, and so much of the diary as, in the opinion of the Court, is necessary in that particular matter to the full understanding of particular entry so used, but no more. So held by the Full Bench. PER EDEB, C.J., KNOX, BLAIR, and BURKITT, JJ.—A police officer investigating a case may lawfully reduce into writing in the special diary the full and unabridged statement made to him by a person whom he is examining or has examined under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and if he does so, his record of such statement is part of the special diary and is just as much privileged as any other entry in the diary. All statements made under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to a police officer, and reduced into writing by him, should be reduced into writing in the special diary, and not elsewhere. PER HANMUT, J., and AIRMAN, J.—Statements recorded under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by a police officer making an investigation were not intended by the Legislature to be entered in the special diary, and if they are so entered, do not form an integral part of the diary and are not privileged, but the accused person or his agent is entitled to see them. A mere summary, however, of facts ascertained by an investigating officer from persons examined by him, not being a report of their actual statements, may properly find a place in the special diary. The following cases were referred to:—Empress v. Kali Churn Chaudari, I. L. R., 8 Cal., 154; Kalia v. Queen-Emress, 29 Panj. Rec., Cr., 55; Queen-Emress v. Narind-din, I. L. 16. ——— Evidence Act, s. 92—Contemporaneous oral agreement—Bond payable by instalments.—In a suit upon a kistibundi bond the defendants pleaded that the debt had been liquidated from the usufruct of certain property, which, by an oral agreement entered into at the time of the execution of the bond, had been assigned by them to the plaintiffs for that purpose. The assignment having been proved, the Court of first instance, without further enquiry, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The District Judge, however, reversed the order of that Court on the ground that under s. 92, Act I of 1872, evidence of the alleged oral agreement was inadmissible, it being a contemporaneous agreement, varying, and to some extent contradicting, the terms of the kistibundi bond. On appeal it was held that the allegation of the defendants amounted merely to a plea of payment, and that s. 92 of the Evidence Act was not a bar to an enquiry as to the foundation of such a plea, and the case was accordingly remanded for an enquiry to be made as to whether the whole or any portion of the kistibundi money had been liquidated from the profits of the land assigned. *GOVINDO PRASAD ROY CHOWDHRY v. 35. — Execution of deed.—Per PEACOCK, C.J., BAYLEY and CAMPBELL, JJ.—Verbal evidence is not admissible to vary or alter the terms of a written contract where there is no fraud or mistake, and in which the parties intend to express in writing what their words import. The parties cannot show by mere verbal evidence that at the time of the agreement what they expressed by their words to be an actual sale was intended by them to be a mortgage only. It is, however, material to enquire whether, having regard to the acts and conduct of the parties and having reference to the amount of the alleged purchase-money and the real value of the interest to be sold, the parties intended the writing to operate as an absolute sale and treated the transaction as such, or as a mortgage only. Per NORMAN and PUNDIT, JJ.—Parol evidence is admissible to show that a bill of sale, though absolute in its terms, was a mortgage. KASHI NATH CHATTERJEE v. 37. — Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Oral evidence to show intention of parties.—A deed of sale of land for value was accompanied by a deed of agreement between the parties for purchase back by the vendor of the land on payment by him of money to the vendee on a future date fixed. The deeds were followed by transfer of possession to the vendee and his receipt of the profits. The vendor did not exercise his right of re-purchase; but after many years gave notice of his intention to redeem, and brought this suit to enforce his right of redemption as upon a mortgage by conditional sale. Held that oral evidence for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties to the deeds was not admissible, being excluded by the enactment in s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. This case had to be decided on a consideration of the documents themselves, with only such extrinsic evidence of circumstances as might be required to

3. VARYING OR CONTRADICTING WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS.

41. Evidence to vary deed—Evidence of conduct of parties—Oral stipulation at variance with a written document—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92.—Evidence cannot be admitted to prove a contemporaneous oral stipulation varying, adding to, or subtracting from, the terms of a written contract. Evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties to a written contract is not admissible if tendered solely in support of an oral stipulation varying its terms. DAIMODDER PAIK v. KAIM TANDAR

44. Conduct of parties—Inadequacy of consideration.—Parol evidence is not admissible to alter or vary a written document, even if the inadequacy of the consideration and the conduct of the parties show that the transaction was different from what appears in the instrument or writing. MADHAB CHANDRA ROY v. GANGADHAR SAMANT

(3 B. L. R., A. C., 63; 11 W. R., 450)

45. Contemporaneous agreement.—Oral evidence is admissible in equity where, by way of defence, the object is to get rid of a written contract of a sale of land by showing that it is not the contract really entered into by the parties, but the evidence must be very powerful to induce the Court to believe that the terms expressed are not the real ones. Evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement to suspend the operation of a written contract of sale until an agreement for a re-sale is executed is admissible as a defence even in a Court of law. DADA HONAJI v. BARAJI JAGUHEE

(2 Bom., 35; 2nd Ed., 36)

46. Evidence Act, s. 92.—Where the defendant claimed the property as a preferential heir, and also set up an alternative defence of an alleged oral agreement cancelling a registered deed of sale of property by her co-widow to the plaintiffs, the lower Court was of opinion that prov. 4 of s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) was a bar to any inquiry into the merits of this defence. Held that the lower Court was wrong. The object of the oral agreement was not to rescind the original transaction, but to transfer any rights acquired by the plaintiffs to the defendant, and was an entirely new transaction. RAHIMARAI v. TUKARAM

(I. L. R., 11 Bom., 47)

47. Suit in Small Cause Court—Agreement not correctly stated in deed.—In a suit in a Small Cause Court to enforce a written agreement, the defendant has a right to set up and adduce parol evidence to prove such a state of facts as would show that the instrument did not correctly set forth the terms of the arrangement between the parties, and thereby justify the Court in its character of a Court of equity in amending the agreement in a suit for that express purpose. FARWIN v. PAUL

48. Suit on bond—Intention of parties as to penal clause.—In a suit on a bond the defendant sought to adduce evidence to show that after the execution of the bond the plaintiff stated that a certain clause as to a high rate of interest in default was intended to operate as a penal clause, and that the conditions therein would not be enforced. Held that the evidence tendered was not admissible. Bakshi Lakshman v. 50. ————— Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, prov. 4—"Oral agreement"—Variation of terms of registered instrument—Oral agreement to reduce rent.—The lessor of certain land held by the lessee under a registered deed of lease agreed to a reduction in the rent. The agreement was not reduced to writing, but rent was thereafter paid and accepted at the reduced rate. On a suit being brought to recover arrears of rent at the rate reserved in the registered deed,—Held that, under s. 92, prov. 4, of the Evidence Act, an agreement to accept reduced rent cannot be implied or inferred from the acts and conduct of the parties, and an unwritten agreement, if so implied, amounts to an oral agreement within the meaning of the proviso. The word "oral" is used in s. 92, prov. 4, of the Evidence Act in the sense of being not committed to writing, and the words "oral agreement" in that section include all unwritten agreements, whether arrived at by word of mouth or otherwise. MAYANDI CHETTI v. OLIVER I. L. R., 22 Mad., 261

51. ————— Evidence to contradict deed—Contract contained in written instrument—Custom, Evidence of.—Where a written instrument provided for a joint tenancy and joint contract by all the parties executing to pay the whole rent of a village without any reference to the quantity of land in the holding of each,—Held that oral evidence was not admissible to show that separate specific contracts were entered into by each of the parties, and it made no difference that the evidence was put forward as evidence of a custom. MORRIS v. PANCHANADA PILLAY 5 Mad., 185

52. ————— Subsequent written agreement to abate rent—Variation of lease—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Form of decree.—In the year 1879 the plaintiff granted a lease of certain lands to the father of the defendants. In May 1889, he agreed in writing to allow the defendants an abatement of rent to the extent of Rs100 per annum. This agreement was not registered, but was stated in the plaint in a previous suit brought by the plaintiff. He subsequently brought a suit against the defendants for the recovery of the entire amount of the original rent. Held that the defendants could rely on the agreement, and that s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) did not apply to it. Held therefore, varying the order of the District Judge, that the decree for the entire amount of the original rent must be set aside, and a decree made for the amount of rent due at the reduced rate. SATYSEK CHUNDER SINGAR v. 53. ————— Evidence of verbal agreement not to enforce document.—When a plaintiff attempts to enforce, as a contract of loan binding upon the defendant, immediately upon its execution, an instrument which he verbally agreed at the time should not so operate, and for which the defendant received no consideration, the latter may give evidence of the verbal agreement. ANNAGURU-BALA CHETTI v. KRISHNASWAMI NAYAKAN

[1 Mad., 457]

54. ————— Contemporaneous oral agreement—Evidence Act, s. 92.—Plaintiff sued to recover Rs21,850-5-1, balance of principal and interest due. He alleged in his plaint that between the 16th February and 23rd July 1867 he paid at the request of defendant's father, the late G. F. Fischer, Rs25,000 on account of the Shivagunga zamindari; that the defendant, having assumed the management of the zamindari under an assignment from his father, gave plaintiff a receipt for the said sum of Rs25,000 under date the 7th August 1867; that in October and December 1867 defendant paid the sum of Rs5,000 and Rs3,000 respectively in part liquidation of the debt, but since 20th December 1867 refused any further payment. Defendant answered that this debt due by the late G. F. Fischer had been validly released by the terms of an assignment dated 20th July 1871; that the receipt given by defendant was a mere acknowledgment of the payment of Rs25,000 by the plaintiff to the late G. F. Fischer, and imposed no obligation on defendant to pay the said amount; that there was no consideration for defendant's promise to pay Rs25,000; that when defendant executed the receipt, he was not aware of the effect of the release; and that the part payments were made under a mistaken idea of liability. At the hearing it was not disputed that a release was executed, and that this claim was embodied and intended to be embodied in that written release, but it was attempted to set up a contemporaneous oral agreement, leaving this claim as a subsisting demand. The Civil Judge dismissed the suit, holding that this oral evidence could not be adduced to contradict the written release. Held on regular appeal that the Civil Judge was right. The principle is,—Is the matter of the contemporaneous oral agreement so outside the scope of the written one that they can logically subsist together, so that the oral shall neither contradict nor modify the written? In the present case, to set up an oral agreement that the sum released should in fact be paid is to deal with an object already embodied in the written agreement in a manner antagonistic to its provisions. It is not only to vary what the words do mean, but what they were intended to mean. The subsequent receipt for the money did not create a debt, for the release had already extinguished it. FISCHER v. FISCHER 5 Mad., 595

and for occupation after the expiry of a lease for three years, the defendant pleaded that it had been verbally agreed between himself and his lessors that he should be entitled to renewal of the lease for a further period of three years, if he so desired. Held that evidence of this oral agreement was inadmissible under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act (1 of 1872), being inconsistent with the terms of the second clause of the lease, which was as follows:—"If you mean me to vacate at the completion of the term, you must give one month's notice. In accordance therewith, I will vacate and give up possession to you." ESRAHIM PIR MAHOMED v. CURSETJI DOMANJI DE VITRE

56. — Mortgage of, and advances to, indigo concern—Evidence Act, s. 92.—M, the manager of an indigo concern, under s. 243, Act VIII of 1859, by a deed dated the 1st February 1873, in which the owners of the concern joined, which was duly registered, and which was made with the Court's sanction, mortgaged the concern, and pledged and assigned the season's crop to A and B, who were parda-nashins, to secure repayment of a large sum of money, consisting partly of the balance of previous loans from the husband of A and B and partly of a new loan to the extent of what was described in the deed as the estimated outlay of the season. The deed provided that A and B should have a first charge upon the indigo to be manufactured in the season in respect of the moneys secured thereby; that the indigo should be sold, subject to A's and B's direction; that until the debt was paid, M should have no power to transfer, sell, or mortgage the properties thereby mortgaged, pledged, and assigned, or in any way to deal with the sale-proceeds of the manufactured indigo; and that A and B should have full power to arrange for the appointment and dismissal of the servants of the concern and for its better management. Previously to this, namely, in October 1872, M had, in pursuance of his letter of appointment, filed an estimate for the season's outlay largely exceeding the sum mentioned in the deed as the estimated outlay, and had alleged that, at the time of executing the mortgage-deed, he had informed one C, who was the general manager of A and B, and as such was the only medium of communication between M and A and B, that further advances would be necessary. According to M's account, C told him that A and B were unable to make further advances, and that he could, if they were needed, obtain them on the usual terms from the plaintiffs, who were indigo brokers. In previous years, during the lifetime of the husband of A and B, who had held similar mortgages of the concern and of the crop in those years to secure advances made by him, such advances had, with the mortgagee's knowledge, been supplemented by loans obtained from the plaintiffs on the security of a first charge upon the crop to the extent of such loans. And it was alleged by M that it was upon the understanding that the same course was to be followed in the present instance that the mortgage-deed to A and B was executed. In a suit against A, B, and M, to establish a first charge in respect of their advances to M upon 360 maunds of the indigo.—Held per GARTH, C.J., PHILLIPS and MACPHERSON, J.J., that the alleged oral agreement between C and M, as to obtaining loans, if necessary, from the plaintiffs and giving them a first charge on the season's indigo in respect of such loans, was in direct contravention and defeasance of the mortgage-deed to A and B, and was therefore inadmissible in evidence under s. 92 of the Evidence Act. MORAN v. MITTU BISI . . . I. L. R., 2 Cal., 58

57. — Evidence Act, s. 92—Admissibility of parol evidence inconsistent with kabuliati.—Plaintiff having sued for arrears of rent payable under a kabuliati in respect of a share of four villages, the defendant pleaded that he had been put in possession of one only of the four leased to him, and that therefore he was not liable for the whole claim. Parol evidence was admitted to show that at the time the kabuliati was granted it had been agreed between the plaintiff and defendant (the title of the former being under dispute) that the whole rent payable under the kabuliati should be payable in respect of such of the villages as should actually come into defendant's possession. Held that such parol evidence was rightly admitted, there being no stipulation in the lease that the defendant should only pay rent on being put completely into possession, and that, although payment of rent is not ordinarily enforced, unless the lessor puts the lessee into possession, it was quite competent to the parties to waive such privilege. RAM KISHORE LALL v. NAND RAM

58. — Evidence Act, s. 92—Verbal assignment of rent of land in lieu of interest—Jamog.—Subsequently to the execution and registration of a bond, a jamog was made orally between the creditor and debtor, by which the former agreed to take the rents of certain tenants of the latter in satisfaction of interest, the latter agreed to release the tenants from payment of rent to himself, and the tenants (who were parties to the arrangement) agreed to pay their rents to the creditor. No mutation of names was effected in the revenue registers. The creditor brought a suit against the debtor to recover the principal and interest agreed to be paid under the bond, alleging that he had never received any rents under the jamog. Held that the jamog was not a subsequent oral agreement rescinding or modifying a contract which was registered according to the law for the time being in force within s. 92, prov. (4), of Act I of 1872. ATTU SINGH v. AJUDHIA SARU

59. — Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, prov. 4—Endorsement on grant—Transaction distinct from original grant.—The plaintiff sought to attach a certain hak as belonging to his judgment-debtor K. The defendant, who was the original grantor of the hak, pleaded a re-grant of the hak to himself. In support of this plea, the defendant produced from his possession the original sanad bearing the following endorsement by K:—"You have passed me a receipt for the sanad. I have accordingly given you the ownership of the sanad. Therefore over the said sanad I have no right or title." The defendant offered to put in this endorsement and also tendered the evidence of K's brother. Held that the alleged re-grant was a transaction entirely distinct from the original grant, and therefore not one falling under prov. 4 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). The defendant was at liberty to adduce evidence to prove this transaction. HERAMDEV DEARNIDHARDEV v. KASHINATH BHASKAR [I L R., 14 Bom., 472]

60. — Evidence to add terms to deed.—Evidence Act, s. 92.—Suit for specific performance of written contract subsequently varied by parol.—A registered lease, renewable at the former rent at the expiration of the period fixed thereby, having been granted, it appeared that the lessors were entitled to a 6 annas share only instead of to the whole property leased. It was alleged by the lessee that it was then verbally arranged that the rent should be reduced in proportion, and the lessee in fact did pay the rent during the term in proportion to the interest of the lessors. On the expiration of the term, he sued for specific performance of the contract, as modified, for a renewal of the lease of the 6 annas. Held that evidence of the parol variation of the contract was not admissible under s. 92 (4) of the Evidence Act, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought. DWARAKA NATH CHATTOPADHYA v. BHOGOBAN PANDA 7 C. L. R., 577

61. — Evidence to add terms to contract.—Evidence Act, s. 92, prov. (3).—Parol evidence in addition to condition in kistbundi.—Part performance of portion of obligation in kistbundi.—Per GARTH, C.J.—Where, at the time of the execution of a written contract, it is orally agreed between the parties that the written agreement shall not be of any force until some condition precedent has been performed, the rule that parol evidence of such oral agreement is admissible to show that the condition has not been performed, and consequently that the contract has not become binding, cannot apply to a case where the written agreement had not only become binding, but had actually been performed as to a large portion of its obligations. The true meaning of the words "any obligation" in the third proviso to s. 92 of Act I of 1872 is any obligation whatever under the contract, and not some particular obligation which the contract may contain. JUGTANUND MISSEER v. that the obligee should, in lieu of instalments, have possession of part of the hypothecated property, until the amount due on the bond should have been liquidated from the rents; that in accordance with this agreement, the plaintiff obtained possession of the land; and that he thus realized the whole of the amount due. Held that the oral agreement was not one which detracted from, added to, or varied the original contract, but only provided for the means by which the instalments were to be paid, and that it was therefore admissible in evidence. RAM BAKSHI v. DURJAN I L R., 9 All., 392

63. — Evidence Act, s. 92, prov. (1).—Fraud—Unlawful consideration.—Act IX of 1872, s. 23.—Plaintiff sued to recover rent under a kabuliat. The defendant admitted execution of the kabuliat, but asserted that he executed it in order to enable the plaintiff to sell the land at a high price, the plaintiff agreeing to make over to him Rs 282 out of the purchase-money, and to obtain for him from the purchaser a mauraai pottah of the land; it never having been intended that any rent should be payable under the kabuliat. Held that evidence of the oral agreement was admissible for the purpose of proving the fraudulent character of the transaction between the parties. KASHI NATH CHUCKERBUTTY v. 64. — Evidence Act, 1872, s. 92.—Time bargain—Wagering contract—Sale of Government securities.—The question whether an unambiguous written contract for the sale and purchase of Government paper is a contract or agreement by way of wager must be decided on the expressed terms of the contract itself, and parol evidence is not admissible to vary or contradict those terms. JUGGERNATH SEW BUX v. 67. ————— Evidence Act, s. 92—Bill of exchange—Exclusion of evidence of oral agreement.—It was agreed between the Bank of Bengal at Calcutta and C & Co., who carried on business there, that the branch of the Bank at Cawnpore should discount bills to a certain extent drawn by C, who carried on business at Cawnpore, on C & Co., against goods to be consigned by rail to C & Co., and that the railway receipts for such consignments should be forwarded to C & Co., through the Cawnpore branch of the Bank. C accordingly drew a bill on C & Co., payable twenty-one days after date, which the Cawnpore branch of the Bank discounted, receiving the railway receipt for certain goods consigned to C & Co. C & Co. having accepted this bill, the Bank handed over the railway receipt to them. In a suit by the Bank against C on the bill, the latter set up as a defence that the bill had been discounted by the Bank on the oral understanding that the railway receipt was not to be transferred to C & Co. until they had paid the amount of the bill, and that the Bank had, by the breach of this condition, determined the defendant's liability. Held by STRAIGHT, J. 71. ————— Parol evidence qualifying an engagement in a written document—Admissibility of such evidence.—The proper meaning of prov. 3 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) is that a contemporaneous oral agreement, to the effect that a written contract was to be of no force or effect, and that it was to impose no obligation at all until the happening of a certain event, may be proved. An oral agreement purporting to provide that the promise to pay on demand in a promissory note, though absolute in its terms, was not to be enforceable by suit until the happening of a particular event, i.e., that the legal obligation to perform the promise was to be postponed, is not such an agreement as falls within the prov. 3 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act. *Jugatanand Misser v. 75. ————— Mortgage—Bill of sale—Suit for specific performance.—In a suit for specific performance of an agreement to convey certain property, the contract, which was in writing, was admitted by the parties; but the defendant alleged that there had been an understanding verbally come to that, if he repaid the consideration-money with interest, etc., to the plaintiff within two years, the plaintiff would reconvey the premises to him.—Held that the defendant could give parol evidence to supplement the written contract, and show that it was intended to be a mortgage and not an absolute bill of sale. BHOLANATH KHETTRI v. 76. ————— Evidence Act, s. 92—Oral agreement contemporaneous with deed of sale.—The defendant admitted the execution of a deed of sale, but alleged that contemporaneously with it he entered into an oral agreement with the vendee that the deed was to be merely a security for the payment of a certain sum of money by the defendant to the vendee, and that a large portion of the sum so secured had already been paid to the vendee. Held in special appeal that, as the alleged agreement was wholly inconsistent with the terms of the deed of sale, evidence to prove such agreement was excluded by Act I of 1872, s. 92. Mutty Lal Seal v. Kaim Taridas, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 500, dissented from. Although parol evidence will not be admitted to prove directly that simultaneously with the execution of a bill of sale there was an oral agreement by way of defeasance, yet the Court will look to the subsequent conduct of the parties, and if it clearly appears from such conduct that the apparent vendee treated the transaction as one of mortgage, the Court will give effect to it as a mortgage and nothing more. It is a mistake to reject evidence of the conduct of parties to a written contract on the ground that it is only an indication of an unexpressed unwritten contract between them. Conduct is, no doubt, evidence of the agreement out of which it arises; but it may be very much more. In many cases it may amount to an estoppel. In such a case it is clear that evidence of conduct would be strictly admissible under s. 115 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). And even when conduct falls short of a legal estoppel, there is nothing in the evidence Act which prevents it from being proved, or, when proved, from being taken into consideration. Courts of Equity in England will always allow a party (whether plaintiff or defendant) to show that an assignment of an estate, which is on the face of it an absolute conveyance, was intended to be nothing more than a security for debt, and they will not only look to the conduct of the parties, but will admit mere parol evidence to show or explain the real intention and purpose of the parties at the time. The exercise of this remedial jurisdiction is justified on two grounds, viz., part performance and fraud. The Courts in India are not precluded by the Evidence Act from exercising a similar jurisdiction. The rule of estoppel, as laid down in s. 115, covers the whole ground covered by the theory of part performance. That section does not say that, in order to constitute an estoppel, the acts which a person has been induced to do must have been acts prejudicial to his own interest. Its terms are sufficiently wide to meet the case of a grantor who has simply been allowed to remain in possession on the understanding and belief that the transaction was one of mortgage, and thus every instance of what the English Courts call "part performance" would be brought within the Indian rule of estoppel. But the ground upon which this jurisdiction of the Courts in India may most safely be rested is the obligation which lies upon them to prevent fraud. The Courts will not allow a rule, or even a statute which was passed to suppress fraud, to be the most effectual encouragement to it, and accordingly in England the Courts, for the purpose of preventing fraud, have in some cases set aside the common law rules of evidence and the statute of frauds. The Courts in India have the same justification in dealing similarly with the obstacles interposed by the Evidence Act. In thus modifying the rules laid down by ss. 91 and 92 of that Act, the Courts will not be acting in opposition to the intention of the Legislature, which by enacting the provisions of s. 26, cl. (c), of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), has shown an intention to relax the rules of the Evidence Act so as to bring them into conformity with the practice of the English Courts of Chancery. Quere—Whether prov. (1) to s. 92 of the Evidence Act is so large enough to let in evidence of such subsequent conduct as in the view of the Court of Equity would amount to fraud, and would entitle a grantor to a decree restraining the

s. 92—Admissibility of evidence to contradict document.—A, by a deed of sale absolute on its face, transferred certain land to B for the sum of Rs 79. A alleged that at the time the transaction was entered into it was understood and orally agreed that the sale was merely by way of security for the payment of Rs 400 due to a third party, C, under a compromise made by A with C for the satisfaction of a decree for Rs 32, which the latter held against A; and that it was at the same time orally agreed between A and B that on the payment of the money by A to C the deed of sale should be delivered to the former. Subsequently A brought a suit against B for the return of the kobala, alleging that the whole of the money had been paid to A. Held that s. 92 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872, prevented the admission of evidence of the oral agreement to contradict the deed of sale which had admittedly been contemporaneous. RAM DYAL BAJPIE v. s. 92—Evidence contradicting document—Mortgage—Conditional sale.—It does not necessarily follow from s. 92 of the Evidence Act that subsequent conduct and surrounding circumstances may not be given in evidence for the purpose of showing that what on the face of it is a conveyance is really a mortgage. This rule turns on the fraud which is involved in the conduct of the person who is really a mortgagee, and who sets himself up as an absolute purchaser, and the rule of admitting evidence for the purpose of defeating this fraud would not apply to an innocent purchaser without notice of the existence of the mortgage, who merely bought from a person who was in possession of title-deeds and was the ostensible owner of the property. KASI NATH DASS v. 85. ————— Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, prov. 4—Mortgage—Power of sale—Suit to set aside sale under power of sale—Promise by mortgagee to postpone sale—Evidence of such promise admissible.—The plaintiff mortgaged certain property to the first defendant on 28th December 1895. By the mortgage-deed the mortgage-debt was made repayable on 28th December 1896. On the 12th May 1897, the first defendant sold it by auction under the power of sale contained in the mortgage-deed, and the second defendant was the purchaser. The plaintiff now sued to set aside the sale and be allowed to redeem, alleging that on the day before the sale the first defendant had orally promised and agreed to postpone the sale for four days, and that the second defendant had notice of this fact before he purchased the property. Held that evidence of such oral agreement was admissible. It was not an agreement to modify any of the terms of the mortgage; it was merely an agreement to forbear, for a period of four days, from the exercise of the power of sale given by the mortgage. It therefore did not fall within prov. 4 of s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). TRIMBAK GANGADHAR RAMADE v. BHAGWANDAS MULCHAND . . . I. L. R., 23 Bom., 848 money lent, with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per mensem. It appeared that the defendant, being indebted to plaintiff on a promissory note for Rs500, applied to him for a further loan of Rs1,500, proposing to lay out the whole amount of Rs2,000 in the performance of a contract then subsisting between himself and the Madras Railway Company and offering to give plaintiff a share in such contract; that plaintiff consented to lend the said sum payable with interest at 6 or 7 per cent. per mensem in lieu of becoming a partner, and also to give defendant two months' previous notice on requiring repayment of the loan. Defendant demurred to the rate of interest, which he said he would further consider on his return to Cuddapah, but, being in immediate want of the money, proposed to borrow it on a promissory note. Plaintiff accordingly, on the 18th October 1870, lent defendant Rs1,500, and obtained, in lieu of the note for Rs500, which was returned, a promissory note for 2,000, payable on demand, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, which note, plaintiff alleged it was agreed, should be cancelled on receipt of a letter from the defendant fixing the rate of interest (this was denied by defendant). Defendant subsequently wrote two letters to plaintiff, agreeing to pay interest at 5 per cent. per mensem, and plaintiff endorsed the said note as cancelled. Plaintiff also alleged that he received interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per mensem for two months, and produced a witness who deposed to that effect. This defendant denied. Held by the Original Court (following Abney v. Cruz, L. R., 5 C. P., 37) that the oral evidence was inadmissible to show the rate of interest dehors that of the promissory note, and that the subsequent letters, offering a higher rate of interest, were without consideration, for there was not any evidence of forbearance, and that the plaintiff had a right to sue on the promissory note the very day after it was made. Plaintiff appealed on the ground that the evidence was admissible. Held by MORGAN, C.J., that the evidence was admissible: that the law is that, notwithstanding a paper writing which purports to be a contract may be produced, it is still competent to the Court to find, upon sufficient evidence, that this writing is not really the contract; and the risk of groundless defence does not affect the rule itself, though it suggests caution in acting on it; that in this case, at the time of the advance of the money, there was an agreement touching the transaction of loan, although the rate of interest was still unsettled and under discussion; the plaintiff declined to lend on the terms of a joint interest in the venture as proposed by the defendant; and the latter refused to pay the rate demanded; before any final agreement, and while the transaction was still incomplete, the note was given, not as a writing which expressed or was meant to express the final contract, but rather as a voucher, or a temporary and provisional security for the money pending the discussion respecting the rate of interest; and that, if the note was thus given and received, it should not be regarded as the contract between the parties or as a written contract excluding other

93. ———— Proof of consideration stated in a deed.—S. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) prevents the admission of oral evidence for the purpose of contradicting or varying the terms of a contract, but does not prevent a party to a contract from showing that there was no consideration, or that the consideration was different from that described in the contract. Where, therefore, a deed of sale described the consideration to be Rs100 in ready cash received, but the evidence showed that the consideration was an old bond for Rs8-12-0 and Rs6-4-0 in cash,—Held that there was no real variance between the statement in the deed and the evidence as to consideration, having regard to the fact that it is customary in India, when a bond is given wholly or partially in consideration of an existing debt, to describe the consideration as being "ready money received." HUKUMCHAND v. 94. ———— Oral evidence when admissible to prove that consideration-money, stated in contract to have been paid, has not been paid, but has been applied in a way agreed on between the parties.—Evidence Act, I of 1872, s. 92.—A deed of putawa contained a recital of the payment of the sum of Rs2,000 as bonus to the plaintiff by the defendant, the mode of payment being stated to be in cash in one lump sum. The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs1,850, alleging that only Rs150 had been paid, and not Rs2,000 as recited in the putawa. The defendant admitted that Rs850 was due, and as to the remaining Rs1,000 alleged that at the time of the transaction it was agreed that the sum of Rs1,000 was to be retained by him on account of a debt due by one of the plaintiff's relations to him. The plaintiff objected that the evidence of the agreement set up by the defendant was inadmissible. Held that, inasmuch as it was open to the plaintiff under prov. 1 of s. 92 of the Evidence Act to prove by oral evidence that the whole of the consideration-money had not been paid, it was equally competent to the defendant, in answer to such case, to adduce evidence to prove the true nature of the contract, and that the consideration was different from that stated in the contract. Held also that the plea of the defendant substantially was that, although the consideration was fixed at Rs2,000, there was a separate oral agreement to the effect that out of that sum the plaintiff was to refund Rs1,000 on account of the debt due from his relative, and that on this ground the oral evidence tendered was admissible under prov. 2 of s. 92 of the Act, the stipulation as to the refund of the Rs1,000 not being inconsistent with the recital as to the consideration in the contract. LALA HIMMAT SAKAI SINGH v. The bought and sold notes, forming the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants, corresponded one with the other, and constituted a contract for delivery of 750 maunds conditional on arrival within four months. Fifteen hundred maunds or thereabouts of this copper arrived at Balli Brothers' godowns within the time mentioned in the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants. The defendants delivered to the plaintiffs 375 maunds 6 chittacks of copper within time, and made no further delivery to the plaintiffs, no other shipment of the copper contracted for arriving within time at Calcutta. In a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover damages for breach of contract to deliver, the defendants sought to show by oral evidence that the contract was for delivery of 750 maunds, if one-fourth of each of the successive arrivals at Balli Brothers' godowns should, in the aggregate, amount to 750 maunds. The executor and the caveatatrix subsequently referred "the dispute" to arbitration, signing a submission paper, which was as follows: "To Bhanganli Kalidas Ramji. Written by us the undersigned. By this instrument we give to you in writing as follows: In the matter of an application presented by Gbellabhai Atmaram Thambuwala to obtain 'power' (probate) from the High Court for the administration and enjoyment between us two persons of the property of Bai Godawari, widow of Darji (tailor) Rhowan Deva Dave, I Nandubal, the wife of Mulji Mala, having raised an objection, have got a caveat registered in the High Court. In the matter thereof, we the said plaintiff (and) defendant have appointed you an arbitrator to bring about a settlement of the said dispute. As to whatever award you may make and give on arriving at a decision, the same is to be agreed to and abided by us two persons. In this matter we each other agree and consent to act according to your 'award.' This submission paper we of our free will and pleasure and in sound mind and consciousness have made and delivered after having read and understood the same. It is agreed to and approved of by us, and our heirs and representatives in Court (and) the Darbar, Bombay. The English date the 30th of October in the year 1893." Before the arbitrator the parties were represented by solicitors, witnesses were called and examined, and the arbitrator made an award finding that the alleged will had not been executed. The executor nevertheless subsequently proceeded with his application for probate. The caveatatrix contended that he was bound by the award. He alleged that the parties had never really intended to refer the question of the execution of the will to arbitration, and tendered evidence to prove this. Held on appeal (FARRAN, C.J., and STRACHY, J.) that the evidence was admissible. 100. ———— Evidence Act, 1872, s. 92—Evidence—Oral agreement inconsistent with written documents.—E, prior to his death, was a partner with defendants in the firm of N C & Co. He died on 8th November 1884. On the 8th November 1885, his executors passed a release to the defendants, which recited that R's share in the firm and future business had ceased on his death; that the surviving partners had requested the executors to settle the account of their testator with the firm, and that, after examining the books and taking accounts, etc., a balance of Rs. 395-11 was found due, on payment whereof the executors released the defendants from all claims in respect of the share and interest of E, etc. On the 7th April 1887, the executors assigned over to the plaintiff a one-anna share in the said firm, and the plaintiff, as assignee, brought this suit for a declaration of his right to the share and for an account. He alleged that there had been no accurate examination of the books at the time of the release; that the amount really due to the testator's estate by the firm had not been ascertained; and that it had been agreed on by the partners at the time of the release that, in addition to the sum therein mentioned, the executors, as representing the testator's estate, should receive a one-anna share in the partnership. The defendants denied the right of the plaintiff, and contended that the interest of E and his estate in the partnership ceased at his death. They relied on the release, and denied any agreement to give the executors a share, and contended that, under s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), no evidence could be given of the alleged agreement. For the plaintiff it was contended that the agreement as to the one-anna share was quite independent of the release. Held that evidence of the agreement that the executors should continue to have a one-anna share in the partnership was inadmissible, as being inconsistent with the written release (Evidence Act, s. 92). sideration for that release was stated in the document to be a lump sum, on payment of which, under the writing, all claims arising out of the old partnership ceased and determined. In a suit by B to recover the property from A,—Held that, under s. 92 of the Evidence Act, B was not debarred from proving that A bought the property for himself, and not benami for B. KUMARA v. SRINIVASA. I. L. R., 11 Mad., 218

102. ———— Exclusion of evidence of oral agreement—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—"Between the parties."—The words in s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) "between the parties to any such instrument" refer to the persons who on the one side and the other came together to make the contract or disposition of property, and would not apply to questions raised between the parties on the one side only of a deed, regarding their relations to each other under the contract. The words do not preclude one of two persons in whose favour a deed of sale purported to be executed from proving by oral evidence in a suit by the one against the other that the defendant was not a real, but a nominal, party only to the purchase, and that the plaintiff was solely entitled to the property to which it related. M conveyed certain houses and premises to plaintiff and defendant jointly by a sale-deed. Plaintiff sued defendant for ejectment from the premises, alleging that he alone was the real purchaser, and that defendant was only nominally associated with him in the deed. Held that s. 92 of the Evidence Act did not preclude plaintiff from showing by oral evidence that he alone was the real purchaser, notwithstanding that the defendant was described in the sale-deed as one of the two purchasers. MULCHAND v. MADHO RAM. I. L. R., 10 All., 421

103. ———— Custom or usage qualifying contract—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, prov. 5—Shipment, meaning of.—On the 18th April 1890, the defendant signed a contract (No. 3053) to buy from the plaintiffs 25 bales grey dhoties "June shipment, in four lots, with an interval of four weeks." Those goods were not supplied, as they could not be obtained at the price limited. On the 24th September 1890, the defendant gave the plaintiffs an order at an increased limit of price in the following terms:—"Please telegraph your Manchester friends to purchase on my account 25 bales grey dhobies relating to No. 8053 at an all-round advance of 1d. per pair on original limits for November, December, January shipments, in three monthly lots, about 8 bales to be shipped in each month." This order was accepted, and the goods were shipped as follows:—6 bales were handed to the carriers (the S. & N. W. Railway Co.) in Manchester on the 28th November 1890, and were shipped at Birkenhead on the 9th December 1890; 6 bales were handed to the same carriers on the 4th December 1890, and were shipped on the 13th December 1890; 10 bales were handed to the same carriers on the 23rd December and one bale on the 24th December, and these 11 bales were shipped on the 6th January 1891. The defendant refused to accept the goods. He contended that the documents of the 18th April and 24th September should be read together, and that the final contract was for November, December, January shipments, in three monthly lots, at intervals of four weeks. He also contended that the shipment on the 9th December 1890 was a late shipment, and that he was not therefore bound to accept the goods under the contract. As to this last contention, the plaintiffs alleged that by the custom of Bombay in the case of contracts made with members of the Native Piece-goods Association, the date of the carriers' weight note was to be regarded as the date of shipment, and that under such a contract as the one in question delivery to the Railway Company or other inland carrier was equivalent to shipment. This custom, it was alleged, originated in consequence of the above association having agreed that all piece-goods ordered out by its members should be conveyed to Bombay by certain lines of steamers only, and by no others. It was stated that, unless some such custom existed, it would in many instances be impossible for Bombay merchants to carry out their contracts, as no steamers of the selected lines might be available. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at the hearing found that the alleged custom existed, and was generally accepted and understood by merchants and dealers in Bombay. On reference to the High Court,—Held that evidence of the alleged custom or usage of trade was not admissible under s. 92, prov. (5), of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) to explain or vary the natural and ordinary meaning of the words in the contract. The parties contracted for a shipment on board of a ship or steamer, and to allow evidence of a usage that delivery to a Railway Company at an inland town should be regarded as equivalent to shipment on board a vessel at a seaport town would be to allow evidence of a usage repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the express terms of the contract. *SMITH v. Equitable relief—Rectification of a deed of conveyance.—Where the plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession of some land on the allegation that it was covered by the conveyance executed in their favour by the defendant, and the defence was to the effect that what was intended to be sold and purchased was the revenue-paying estate of the defendant, but that the land in suit, which was the homestead of the defendant, though found included in the estate, was not expressly excepted, because both the parties were under the mistaken impression that it was not so included, but was lakhiraj; and it was contended that it was not open to the defendant to raise such a defence in this suit. Held that it was open to the Court, having regard to prov. 1 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act, to allow oral evidence to be put in to prove the mutual mistake. Held also that, where there is a mutual mistake of fact in a case as here, a Court administering equity will interfere to have the deed rectified, so that the real intention of both parties may be carried into effect, and will not drive the defendant to a separate suit to rectify the instrument. Held by BANERJEE, J.—That prov. 1, s. 92 of the Evidence Act, does not limit the admissibility of oral evidence to a suit to obtain a decree on the ground of mistake. *MOHENDRO NATH MUKHERJEE v. The prosecutor, while travelling by train to Calcutta, discovered the loss of the property, and stated his loss to a railway police inspector at the first station at which the train stopped after he became aware of the theft, the prisoner not then being present. This statement was tendered in evidence, and admitted under s. 8, ill. (k), of the Evidence Act. Evidence was also tendered of a statement made by the prisoner to the constable who arrested him, to the effect that some of the property had been given him, and that he had bought the rest, and this was admitted; the Court remarking that there was a distinction in the Evidence Act between "admission" and "confession." *QUEEN v. existence of another—Possession of forged documents.—S. 11 of the Evidence Act should not be construed in its widest signification, but considered as limited in its effect by s. 54 of the Act. So construed, s. 11 renders inadmissible the evidence of one crime (not reduced to legal certainty by a conviction) to prove the existence of another unconnected crime, even though it be cognate. Accordingly, the possession by an accused person of a number of documents suspected to be forged is no evidence to prove that he has forged the particular document with the forgery of which he is charged. Per WEST, J.—Where a person charges another with having forged a promissory note, and denies having ever executed any promissory note at all, the evidence that a note, similar to the one alleged to be forged, was in fact executed by that person, is not admissible, nor even would a judgment founded upon such note be so: ss. 43 and 153 of the Evidence Act. *REG. v. party against proprietary interest—Presumption of party being dead.—In 1847, A, a Hindu widow, executed in favour of B a varaspatra (a deed of heirship) in the following terms:—"My husband has died. We have no issue, and you are a son of my husband's cousin. Taking this into consideration, my husband expressed his wish, when he was on the point of death, that all the houses and shops situate in Poona, except the house at Benares, should be given to you, and that you should be made owner of all money-dealings connected with Poona. I therefore, in obeying his command, pass this deed of heirship to you, and make you owner of all the property mentioned above like our son. You therefore enjoy the property in your name joyfully." Under this varaspatra, B took possession of the property mentioned therein, and enjoyed it during his lifetime. After his death, his gomasta (agent) managed it for and on behalf of B's minor son C. In 1881, C filed a suit to redeem a house and a garden, part of the property covered by the varaspatra, and which had been mortgaged by A's husband in 1831. One of the defences to this suit was that neither C nor his father was the heir of the original mortgagor, and that therefore C could not redeem the property in dispute. At the trial C produced the varaspatra of 1847 in support of his title, alleging that he had found it among the papers of the old gomasta of his father, who used to look after his affairs during his minority. Held that the varaspatra was admissible under s. 32, cl. 3, of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), as it was manifestly a declaration by A against her proprietary interest; for by it she divested herself of her widow's estate in the property, and there being no evidence of her existence after 1847, she must be presumed to have been dead in 1881, when the suit was filed. *HARI CHINTAMAN DIESHIT v. The plaintiff tendered in evidence a registered mortgage-deed of adjacent land executed in 1877, which set forth the boundaries of the land comprised in the mortgage, and as one of such boundaries referred to the land in question as then belonging to the plaintiff. At the date of the deed there was no litigation existing between the present litigants, and at the date of the present suit the mortgagor was dead. Held that the statement in the deed was admissible under cl. 3 of s. 32 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) as a statement against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the mortgagor. *NINGAWA v. 3. ———— Statement as to the existence of relationship—Special means of knowledge.—The judgment of an Appellate Court, reversing that of a Court of first instance, on a question as to the existence of a relationship, rested mainly on a statement recorded in prior settlement proceedings as made by a person, since deceased, who was employed therein as mukhtar by certain members of the family. This judgment was reversed on a second appeal by the Court above on the ground that the statement was inadmissible, not coming within the meaning of Act I of 1872, s. 32, sub-s. 5, as that of a person having special means of knowledge on the question. Held that the statement was inadmissible, as it appeared that his only means of knowledge were from his being instructed as such mukhtar, he not having been a member of the family, nor intimately connected with it, nor having had any special means of knowing its concerns. Held also that the Court of second appeal had rightly declined to send the case back for evidence to be taken as to whether he had or had not other means of knowledge. SANGRAM SINGH v. The claimant, to prove his title, relied upon a pedigree, not stated in any document produced that had existed in the family before this suit. The genealogy on which he claimed was, however, identical with one which his father had more than once asserted, alleging title to two mousahs of the raj estate. The Raja called upon to answer in proceedings at settlement had not given a direct denial to the alleged relationship. On the contention that there were steps in the pedigree as to which the evidence adduced did not include proof of statements made by a deceased person who had means of knowledge, or proofs of other statements, within s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), and as to which the evidence was insufficient, — Held that the evidence taken altogether, oral and documentary, had been sufficient to prove that the appellant was related to the deceased Raja, as he had claimed to be, and that the appellant was, as heir to him, entitled to inherit the raj estates on the widow's death, this opinion being founded on the documentary evidence. BEJAI BAHADUR SINGH v. 8. ———— Statement of deceased relatives—Hearsay evidence—Birth, Date of.—For the purpose of the decision of a question of limitation, it was necessary to prove the date of the plaintiff's birth. The plaintiff and one of his witnesses each spoke to statements made to them by relatives of the plaintiff, who were since deceased, relating to the date of the plaintiff's birth. Held that such statements were admissible in evidence under s. 32, cl. 5, of the Evidence Act. *Haines v. 2. ———— Horoscope.—In a suit to recover possession of immovable property, the plaintiff tendered in evidence a horoscope which he said had been given to him by his mother, and had been seen by members of his family and used on the occasion of his marriage. He was unable to say by whom the horoscope, or an endorsement on it, which purported to state what his name was, had been written. brought by the present plaintiffs, and also by a plaintiff who had died since the institution of the suit, and, as the plaint alleged, by "a considerable majority" of the family, but the defendant was not a party to it. The meaning of that clause is that, when a number of persons assemble together to give vent to one common statement, which statement expresses the feelings or impressions made in their mind at the time of making it, that statement may be repeated by the witnesses, and is evidence. QUEEN v. But where the absence of a witness is casual or due to a temporary cause, the Court has such a discretion, if his presence cannot be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which, under the circumstances, the Court considers unreasonable. IN THE MATTER OF PYARI LALL

4. — Deposition in former suit—Admission.—A deposition of a person in a suit to which he was not a party is, in a subsequent suit in which he is a defendant, evidence against him and against those who claim under or purchase from him, although he is alive and has not been called as a witness. S. 33 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) does not apply to such a deposition, but it is admissible under the sections relating to admissions, although it might be shown that the facts were different from what they were stated to be in the former case. A statement in a bill of sale is evidence against those who are parties to it. SOOJAN BIKER v. ACHMUT ALI

5. — Deposition in former suit—H N died on 16th May 1854, without issue, leaving a widow, B. B, on 19th May 1856, purported to adopt S in accordance with an alleged anumati-patra executed by H N. R N, the uncle of H N, died on 6th July 1855, leaving a widow, M, in whose favour he had executed an anumati-patra, by the terms of which she was to have the management of his property during the minority of the adopted son, in whom it was to vest on his adoption. M adopted D subsequently to the adoption of S. After the death of R N, B, as widow of H N and adoptive mother of S, brought a suit against M as the widow of R N and ignoring the existence of D. D died, and on his death M adopted N on 4th April 1864. In a suit brought by M as the mother and guardian of N to have the adoption of S declared invalid.—Held that the depositions of certain witnesses who had been examined in the previous suit to establish the fact of the adoption of S by B were not, under s. 33, Act I of 1872, admissible in evidence against the plaintiff M. *MAINMOYEE DABEA v. 6. — Evidence given in proceeding coram non judice.—The evidence of a witness given in a proceeding pronounced to be coram non judice cannot be used under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, if the witness is dead, on a re-trial before a competent Court. R charged A with breach of trust, and S gave evidence in support of the charge. A being acquitted, R was tried for making a false charge and S for perjury. Held (1) that the depositions given by witnesses in the first case could be used against R in the second case, but not against S under s. 33, Evidence Act. (2) That the word "questions" in s. 33 does not mean "all the questions," and that, though additional issues were involved in the second trial, yet the evidence as to the issues common to both trials was properly admitted at the second trial against R. IN RE RAMI REDDI

7. — Deceased witness—Criminal trial, deposition in, Admissibility of, in civil suit.—A prosecution was instituted by S against N at the instance and on behalf of F for criminal trespass in respect of a certain house, and on his own behalf for assault and insult. S gave evidence at the trial in support of these charges. F subsequently brought a civil suit against N for possession of the same house under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. S died before the institution of the civil suit. At the trial of the civil suit the deposition of S in the Criminal Court was tendered by F as evidence on the issue of possession. Held that S being dead, and the proceedings being between the same parties, and the issues being substantially the same, the deposition of S was admissible. *FOOLKISSORY DASKE v. [1 L. R., 23 Cal., 441]

8. — and s. 32, cl. 1—"Questions in issue"—Charges added at sessions—Depositions before Magistrate—Witness dying or absconding—Qualification of jurymen.—In the proceedings before a Magistrate on a charge of causing grievous hurt, two (among other) witnesses, one of whom was the person assaulted, were examined on behalf of the prosecution. The prisoners were committed for trial. Subsequently the person assaulted died in consequence of the injuries inflicted on him. At the trial before the Sessions Judge, charges of murder and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder were added to the charge of grievous hurt. The deposition of the deceased witness was put in and read at the Sessions trial. Held that the evidence was admissible either under s. 32, cl. 1, or s. 33 of the Evidence Act, notwithstanding the additional charges before the Sessions Court. The question whether the proviso to s. 33 of the Evidence Act is applicable—that is, whether the questions at issue are substantially the same—depends upon whether the same evidence is applicable, although different consequences may follow from the same act. At the trial it was proved that the other witness who had been examined before the Magistrate had disappeared, and that it had been found impossible to serve him with a summons. His deposition was put in and read. Held that it was properly admitted under s. 33. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BOCHIA MOHATO. EMPRESS v. BOCHIA MOHATO

9. — Depositions of witnesses taken by Consul at Zanzibar.—A prisoner accused of having committed murder at Zanzibar was sent by the British Consul there for trial before the High Court at Bombay. The Consul could not enforce the attendance of witnesses at Bombay, but he transmitted to the High Court the depositions which he had taken in the course of the enquiry he had held with regard to the commission of the alleged offence. In the absence of the witnesses, these depositions were tendered in evidence at the trial in Bombay. Held that the British Consul at Zanzibar was authorized to take the depositions, and that they were admissible in evidence at the trial under s. 33 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). *EMPRESS v. 10. — Deposition of person denying he presented petition in Court.—A deposition made by a person wherein he denied on oath that he had presented a certain petition in Court which purported to be from him, was held to be inadmissible as evidence under Act I of 1872, s. 33, because the person might have been brought into Court, but was

11. — Deposition of absent witness.—Under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, depositions of an absent witness are only admissible when the prisoner has had the right and the opportunity to cross-examine. QUEEN v. ETWARKE DHAREE
[21 W. R. Cr., 12]

12. — Deposition of absent witness.—When the evidence of an absent witness is admitted under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, 1872, the ground for its admission should be stated fully and clearly to enable the High Court to judge of the propriety of its admission. In the present case the High Court considered that the evidence of an absent witness had been improperly admitted because there was nothing to show that by ordinary care and the use of ordinary means the witness could not have been produced. In order to make a deposition admissible under s. 33, there must be evidence that the accused person did in fact have an opportunity of cross-examining. QUEEN v. MOWJAN alias NANE KHAN
[20 W. R. Cr., 69]

13. — Depositions of absent witnesses—Ground for absence.—Before a Sessions Judge can, under s. 33, Act I of 1872, admit the depositions of witnesses given in a former judicial proceeding as evidence before him instead of and in place of the oral deposition of the witnesses themselves, it ought to appear that the presence of the witnesses could not be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which the Court considers unreasonable; and if there is nothing of a special nature to stand in the way, the case should be adjourned to the next sessions to procure the attendance of the witnesses. QUEEN v. LAKKAN SANTHAL
[21 W. R. Cr., 56]

14. — Inconvenience to witnesses—Question of identification—Expense.—At the trial of a person for an offence under s. 411 of the Penal Code, the Court of Session, under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, 1872, used against the accused the evidence of the owner of the property in respect of which the accused was charged and of his wife taken by commission during the enquiry, and the evidence of the servant of those persons taken at the enquiry, and also the evidence of the owner of the property taken during the trial under a commission issued by the Sessions Judge under s. 508 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The grounds upon which the Sessions Judge admitted the evidence taken during the enquiry were that the attendance of the witnesses could not be procured without an expense of Rs500, an amount which he considered unreasonable, that the witnesses would be inconvenienced, and that their evidence did not concern the accused personally, having reference only to the identification of the property in respect of which the accused was charged. Held that the Sessions Judge had improperly admitted such evidence. Inconvenience to witnesses is no ground allowed under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, and the question of identification was a most material one, and the evidence of the witnesses in question was of the utmost moment, the whole case resting on it; and as regards the ground of expense, it was impossible to consider the amount unreasonable, considering that the entire case rested on the evidence of those witnesses, and that the accused had not cross-examined those whose evidence had been taken by commission, nor, looking at his position, could he arrange for their cross-examination. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. That section relates to the class of cases where a public officer has to enter in a register or other book some actual fact which is known to him, e.g., the fact of a death or a marriage. The entry by the Collector in the register under Bengal Act VII of 1876 is not;

The only evidence of the admission was that contained in the decree in the former suit, the ordinary part of which was prefaced with a short statement of the pleadings in the suit. Under the old practice of Mofussil Courts, it was the duty of the Court to enter in the decree an abstract of the pleadings in each case. Held that the statement in the decree was evidence of the admission under s. 35 of the Evidence Act (Act I of 1872). *Lekraj Kuar v. The lower Appellate Court found it was sufficiently proved. On special appeal to the High Court it was contended that the execution was not sufficiently proved under s. 67, Act I of 1872. Held the proof of execution was sufficient; direct evidence of the handwriting of the executant was not necessary under s. 67. The document was filed as an exhibit in the suit, but the Subordinate Judge held that it was not admissible in evidence. It bore an endorsement purporting to be signed by the Assistant Registrar-General for Ceylon, to the effect that it was a true copy of a last will and testament made from the Protocol of record filed in his office. No evidence was tendered before the Subordinate Judge that the copy had been made from, and compared with, the original. On the question of the admissibility in evidence of the said document, — Held that it was inadmissible; that it was not a public document within the meaning of s. 74 (1) (iii) or (2) of the Evidence Act, and that, in the absence of evidence that it had been made from and compared with the original, the provisions of that Act relating

11. ———— Ancient documents, Rule as to.—The English rule that a document more than 30 years old, if free from suspicion of dishonesty, may be admitted as evidence without proof of the execution or writing, was held to be founded on a reason which had less weight in this country, where less credit should be given to ancient documents which are unsupported by any evidence that might free them from a suspicion of being false or fabricated.

Even in England such evidence unsupported was held to be of very little weight. Accordingly it was not allowed to prevail here in a case in which there was other evidence inconsistent with the title which those documents professed to create. *PHOOL BIRER v. GORA SURUN DOSS. 13. ———— Documents more than 30 years old.—Proof of execution.—Evidence of authority to sign on behalf of others.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants for enhancement of rent. The defendants resisted the claim, relying, inter alia, on a moku-rari pottah executed on 9th October 1832. This pottah purported to bear the seal of one of the then maliks of the lands, and also purported to be signed on behalf of all the maliks by A. Held that, although the pottah might be an authentic document, it would not bind the maliks who did not affix their seals, nor those who claimed under them, unless it was shown that A had a special authority to sign the names of such maliks to it or a general authority to sign on their behalf documents of the same description as the pottah; and that, until such proof was given, the document was not admissible in evidence. Held, further, the fact that the pottah was more than 30 years old gave rise to the presumption that the signature at the foot of it was in the handwriting of A, and that the pottah was executed by him; but that to make it evidence against the representatives of the maliks who had not executed it, the defendants should show that A had authority to sign their names. *UNILACK RAI v. 14. ———— Legal presumption.—Previous production of such document.—No legal presumption can arise as to the genuineness of a document more than 30 years old, merely upon proof that it was produced from the records of a Court in which it had been filed at some time previous. It must be shown that the document had been so filed in order to the adjudication of some question of which that Court had cognizance, and which had come under the cognizance of such Court. *GUDADREY PAUL CHOWDERY v. 21. ———— Ancient document—Weight of ancient documents as evidence—Proper custody—Custody of agent.—Under a varaspatra executed in 1647 by A, a Hindu widow in favour of B, B took possession of the property mentioned therein, and enjoyed it during his lifetime. After his death, his gomasta (agent) managed it for and on behalf of B's minor son C. In 1881 C filed a suit to redeem a house and a garden, part of the property covered by the varaspatra, and which had been mortgaged by A's husband in 1631. One of the defences to this suit was that neither C nor his father was the heir of the original mortgagor, and that therefore C could not redeem the property in dispute. At the trial C produced the varaspatra of 1647 in support of his title, alleging that he had found it among the papers of the old gomasta of his father, who used to look after his affairs during his minority. Held that the varaspatra was admissible in evidence under s. 90 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) as a document purporting to be more than thirty years old, and produced from a custody which, under the circumstances of the case, was a proper custody, the possession of the gomasta being legally the possession of his master. The degree of credit to be given to an ancient document depends chiefly on the proof of transactions or state of affairs necessarily or at least properly or naturally, referable to it. HARI CHINTAMAN DIXSHIT v. MORO LAKSHMAN.

22. ———— Ancient documents, Proof of—Landlord and tenant—Suit for ejectment.—In a suit for ejectment brought in 1894 the defendant contended that he held the land on permanent fazendari tenure and produced a document, dated 1848, by which his predecessor was given permission to build upon the land. The plaintiff (landlord), however, produced the counterparts of a subsequent lease to the same tenant (defendant's predecessor), dated 1851, which created a monthly tenancy, and of a later one to the defendant himself, dated 1859, creating a yearly tenancy determinable on a month's notice, under which provision this suit was brought. The defendant denied that he had executed this document, and contended that it was not proved. The lower Court held that these documents were admissible as ancient documents, and relying upon them passed a decree for the plaintiff. On appeal, held, confirming the decree, that, having regard to the circumstances, the documents must be held

Missing person—Presumption of death.—Ss. 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act, taken together, do not lay down any rule as to the exact time of the death of a missing person. Whenever the question as to the exact time of death arises, it must be dealt with according to the evidence and circumstances of each case, when the death is alleged to have occurred at any time not affected by the presumption of law as to the seven years. *DHARUP NATH v. Missing person—Hindu law—Inheritance—Presumption of death—Claim after seven years—Co-owners—Absent co-owner—Claim to his share of property a question of evidence, not of succession.—D and B were co-owners of certain khoti villages. B disappeared and was unheard of for more than seven years. In his absence, D received his (B's) share of the rents and profits, & claimed to be entitled to a moiety of B's share therein, and brought this suit against D. Held that G was entitled to such moiety. B, having been absent and unheard of more than seven years, might be presumed to be dead under s. 108 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872); and G, as one of his two survivors, was entitled to a moiety of his property. Where the right of a party claiming to succeed to the property of another is based on the allegation that the latter has not been heard of for more than seven years, the question to be decided is one of evidence, and not a part of the substantive law of inheritance. *Parveshwar Rai v. suit under Ch. XXXIX of the Code of Civil Pro-
have been executed jointly by G and his son V, V filed an affidavit in order to obtain leave to defend the suit, and, having obtained leave to defend, gave evidence at the trial on his own behalf. On a subsequent trial of V for forgery of his father's signature to the same promissory note, the affidavit and deposition of V in the Small Cause suit were admitted as evidence against V. Held by TURNER, C.J., INNES

TURNER, C.J., INNES and KINDERSLEY, JJ.—
Where an accused person has made a statement on oath voluntarily and without compulsion on the part of the Court to which the statement is made, such a statement, if relevant, may be used against him on his trial on a criminal charge. If a witness does not desire to have his answers used against him on a subsequent criminal charge, he must object to answer, although he may know beforehand that such objection, if the answer is relevant, is perfectly futile, so far as his duty to answer is concerned, and must be overruled. QUEEN v. GOPAL DASS
